RETAIN FOR YOUR PERSONAL RECORD.
Registered under the Income Tax Act and subject thereto

This is your receipt for contributions made to your RBC Registered Retirement Savings Plan ("RRSP"). You should use the information in this contribution receipt to report your RRSP contributions when you file your tax return with the applicable federal and/or provincial tax agency. Be sure to keep a copy of this receipt and any others you may receive in case you are asked for proof of your contribution.

We have provided you some additional information below that may assist in helping you understand the various fields on your RRSP contribution receipt.

Annuitant	This is the plan owner and is the person who receives the benefits of the plan, and the individual to whom the contribution is attributed for tax purposes.
Contributor	The individual that made the contribution to the plan. This may be the Annuitant or the spouse / common-law partner of the Annuitant and the individual to whom the contribution is attributed for tax purposes.
Contribution Amount	The amount that was deposited into the plan. In some cases, this amount may not represent all the contributions made during the contribution period it describes. It is important to keep all your contribution receipts to ensure accurate and timely tax returns are filed.
Contribution Period	This is the date range during which the contribution was made. If you have questions regarding when a contribution may be claimed as a deduction, please contact the Canada Revenue Agency or a qualified advisor.
Receipt Number	This number identifies the RBC reference number for the contribution receipt you received. If you have questions about your receipt, refer to this number when you contact RBC.
Amended Receipt	If "Amended" is indicated on your contribution receipt, it represents a correction to the receipt. Compare your amended receipt with your original to see what has changed. If you have questions about your Amended receipt, please contact your branch.
Amended Receipt Number	This number is the reference number for the amended contribution receipt. If you have questions, be sure to refer to both this number and the original receipt number.
Date Receipt Issued	This is the date on which we created your contribution receipt. This does not represent the date you made a contribution to the plan.
