The Gazetteer

Compiled by the Sages Guild of Yggsburgh, this catalogue covers the climate, culture, geography, and history of the East Mark, a region of some 1,500 square miles. Also, learn of the deities worshiped, the zodiacal astrology of its people, its lunar calendar, and much more! Extracted from Castle Zagyg: Yggsburgh, the Gazetteer offers you a quick reference guide for the East Mark wherein the fabled Castle Zagyg and the sprawling suburbs of Yggsburgh lies.

The Mouths of Madness

The Little Hillwood lies a day's ride north of the Free Town of Yggsburgh, a rolling woodland attendant with bandits, goblins, howling ape-men, and other fell folk. These malign beings have rallied in the deeps of Castle Zagyg's surrounding wilderness, no doubt attracted by the vortex of madness inspired by the Mad Archmage. There is but one-way to cross these hoary wilds fraught with peril: one must traverse the Old Castle Track. At path's conclusion lie the fabled ruins engulfed by an eldritch fog yet the caves below beckon, where bugbear, goblin, gnoll, and orc dwell - and not a few monstrous inhabitants as well - such as a prowling werewolf, a sly hill giant, a deranged owlbear, bizarre fungi, and deadly blobs that drink flesh from bone! Will your party be among the first to explore this first glimpse of the newly revealed Castle Zagyg?

GREAT HILLWOOD

Alea iacta est The Die is Cast

THERE IS LITTLE DOUBT that the East Mark cradles the epitome of culture, enlightenment and sophistication in the known world, that being the Free Town of Yggsburgh. The East Mark is relatively small, a bit less than 1,500 square miles, an area of some 44 miles east and west, 34 north and south. Thus, the extent of this region in relation to the Whole of the Urth is minute. The scope of the region belies its significance, the reasons for which may be gleaned through the careful study of this treatise.
