The Nethasq demon haunts places where women have been defiled. In abandoned buildings where prostitutes plied their trade, or where pornographic films were shot, or where women were sexually assaulted, the demon lurks, awaiting the presence of a male.

Where the Nethasq lurks, men bleed. When a man enters a place that the demon has claimed for its own, he begins to seep blood from his mouth, anus, and urethra. Though this is not painful, it is usually fatal. The Nethasq is completely blind, but possesses an astounding sense of smell. It can smell blood for nearly a mile. Therefore, when a man enters the lair of the Nethasq demon, it knows immediately.

A wiry humanoid with translucent skin, the Nethasq is susceptible to sunlight, but little else (ultraviolet light, when applied directly, will affect the Nethasq, inflicting Damage +2 each time it is "hit"). Its skin, eyes, and talons are all pale blue, but its internal organs (visible through the skin) are a bright, vivid green in color, and seem to glow in the darkness.

Where its genitals should be, the demon sports a glistening mass of barbed tentacles. Hidden amidst the serpentine loops of flesh are hooks that the demon employs during its coup de grace.

When it has snared a victim, the demon holds him down, squats atop him, positioning its groin just above his collarbone, and tears his lower jaw off with the frenzied lashing of its barbs. After the victim has bled to death, the demon devours the carcass quickly.

If provoked, the demon will attack with its massive fists, and with the Imprecations Iurua and Malaq. However, the demon is incapable of harming women, directly or otherwise, and will try to flee if cornered by a female.
