

Story Object: Knowledge of the Nerra

You know of and have encounter a strange—until recently, unknown—outsider race called the nerra. You have helped thwart their plans to send a number of minions from their realm of Spequlum to Eberron. Matron Martra of the Grea Tower has asked you to keep this knowledge to yourself, and to only talk about it with herself and the masters of the Diggers' Union. She has warned that she may call upon you if she finds out more concerning the nerra plot. To this ends she has given you a necklace. Attached to a slight gold chain is a charm in the shape of a rampant bulette—the symbol of the Diggers' Union—carved from a piece of Eberron dragonshard. With it she can locate you and contact you, no matter where on Eberron you may be.

While the necklace does radiate faint divination magic, it does not take up your necklace slot. It is too small and its magic is rather inconsequential, as you just need to have the necklace on your person, not around your neck for it to be affective.

Story Object: Knowledge of the Nerra

You know of and have encounter a strange—until recently, unknown—outsider race called the nerra. You have helped thwart their plans to send a number of minions from their realm of Spequlum to Eberron. Matron Martra of the Grea Tower has asked you to keep this knowledge to yourself, and to only talk about it with herself and the masters of the Diggers' Union. She has warned that she may call upon you if she finds out more concerning the nerra plot. To this ends she has given you a necklace. Attached to a slight gold chain is a charm in the shape of a rampant bulette—the symbol of the Diggers' Union—carved from a piece of Eberron dragonshard. With it she can locate you and contact you, no matter where on Eberron you may be.

While the necklace does radiate faint divination magic, it does not take up your necklace slot. It is too small and its magic is rather inconsequential, as you just need to have the necklace on your person, not around your neck for it to be affective.

