DARING TALES OF THE SPACE LANES

FIGURE FLATS BY JORDAN PEACOCK

The following pages contain an assortment of “tri-fold” figure flats and markers for the Daring Tales of the Space Lanes series of adventures, specifically focusing upon the first two adventures, Waylaid in Wayland and Gunboat Diplomacy.

Assembly:

Just print out the pages on cardstock, coverstock, or regular copy paper, then cut out each paper model. To assemble, fold along the dividing lines to form a “prism” shape as in the diagram, and then glue or tape the label tab on the inside of the first panel.

If you’re printing on cardstock, it can help to score the back of the model along the fold lines, so that the paper folds more easily; this way, there will be less wearing off of printer toner at the fold lines.

For the completed tri-fold, the two image panels represent the front of the figure, while the black silhouette indicates the back.

Two-Sided Figures:

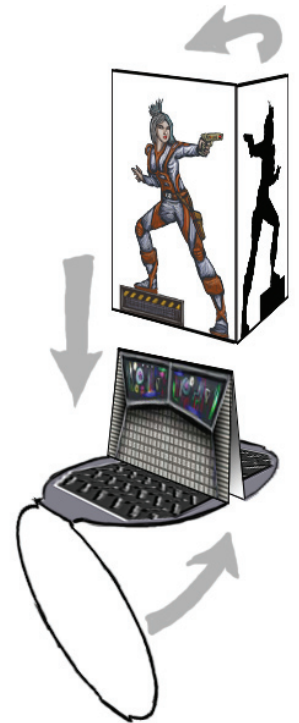

Alternatively, if you prefer two-sided paper figures, just use one front image and one silhouette back, glue them together, and affix to one of the paper bases included in this set. (The paper bases themselves can double as additional props to represent such things as hazards, control panels, barricades, etc.)

Layers:

This document is provided in layers, so you can “switch off” certain elements of the layout. For instance, you might want to leave the silhouette back sides of the figures blank, rather than having them labeled, if you want to repurpose a figure flat to represent a different sort of character. (For example, an “alien thug” could also be used to represent a perfectly law-abiding bar patron.)

Door Markers:

These are assembled similarly to the alternate bases (as per the diagram above and to the right), except that they’re larger and taller. You can use these to indicate closed doors on the maps.
