THE REPUBLIC

[Diplomacy +8] [Sense Motive +9]

The Galactic Republic has been the presiding governing body throughout the galaxy for nearly twenty-five millennia. It was comprised of hundreds of thousands of star systems and thousands of sentient races. Those who served the Republic faced many adversities over the millennia. The Clone Wars were no different. After a thousand years of peace and prosperity the Republic had become corrupt and decadent. There were those who came to realize this deterioration of Democracy and pledged to break away from the crumbling government. When this splitting came to all out war, the Republic was ready to answer their enemy's call to arms with their Grand Army of the Republic. Below is a chronicle of those who remained loyal to the Republic and for what it stood.

Palpatine – Supreme Chancellor of the Republic

Palpatine began his political career on his home world of Naboo at approximately twenty years of age. Fresh out of Naboo's public service, his early political life was mired with a series of dissatisfying electoral defeats at the hands of several opponents. For nearly a decade, Palpatine maintained a drab governmental portfolio until his first big break occurred when he was thirty years old. The incumbent senator of Naboo, Vidar Kim, was assassinated in a drive-by shooting, leaving Palpatine running unopposed. He was elected to serve as the next Senator of the Chommell Sector's thirty-seven inhabited worlds.

Taking his position on the Senate floor on Coruscant, Palpatine led a fairly meek political record. He forged several bonds with allies such as Lieutenant Governor Wilhuff Tarkin of Eriadu, Republic Justice Department Commander Terrinald Screed, and Jedi Jorus C'boath and Ronar Kim, son of Palpatine's former Senatorial opposition, Vidar Kim. With the assistance of his political aides, Sate Pestage and Kinman Doriana, Palpatine took part in a Republic task force sent to the Aqualish planet of Ando to negotiate the demilitarization of the planet's inhabitants approximately nine years into his position as senator. Palpatine's relatively uneventful track record continued for nearly twenty years, but all of that was about to change.

When Palpatine was fifty years old, the Republic had incurred tremendous debt on such government-funded projects as the Holonet. The Senate passed a bill that allowed for the taxation of established trade routes within Republic space in hopes that the supplemental income would alleviate some of those debts. This act sent organizations like the Trade Federation into a frenzy, and in retaliation the Neimoidian monopolized Trade Federation blockaded Palpatine's home planet of Naboo, hoping to re-establish talks to relax or eliminate the tariffs. Despite several negotiations between the Trade Federation senator Lott Dod and Palpatine, a compromise couldn't be reached. The current Supreme Chancellor, Finis Valorum, secretly dispatched two Jedi Knights, Jedi Master Qui-Gon Jinn and Padawan Obi-Wan Kenobi, to force a settlement and diffuse the situation before it escalated.

Unfortunately, circumstances only worsened when the Trade Federation invaded Naboo and seized control of its inhabitants. Despite the best efforts of the Trade Federation the leader of the Naboo, Queen Amidala, managed to escape the planet and together with Palpatine they pleaded their world's case to the Senate. It seemed, however, that Supreme Chancellor Valorum was far too pliable to the whims of the Trade Federation and was content to bury the incident under red tape. Palpatine suggested to Amidala that a vote of no confidence be imposed on Valorum in hopes that a new Chancellor would be elected who would be more sympathetic to their cause.

As fate would have it, that was exactly what transpired. Bail Antilles of Alderaan and Palpatine of Naboo were nominated to run for the Chancellorship, and after a concise voting process Palpatine emerged victorious, becoming the final being to hold office as Supreme Chancellor of the Galactic Republic. The crisis at Naboo was resolved by Queen Amidala, however, when she returned to her homeworld and united the remnants of her free people with the native Gungans. Together with Gungan leader Boss Nass, the Gungans and Naboo launched an assault on the Naboo capital of Theed, capturing the heads of the Trade Federation and handing them over to Republic authorities for their crimes.

The Battle of Naboo seemed to only serve as a beginning to a domino effect that would plunge the galaxy into war. Jedi Master Qui-Gon Jinn lost his life at the hands of the Sith Lord Darth Maul during the conflict. When news of Jinn's death reached Coruscant, Qui-Gon's former master, Dooku, saw it as the last straw and abandoned the Jedi order, citing reasons including the Republic had become too corrupt and the Jedi placed themselves under the control of the spiraling government. After several years on his home planet of Serrano, Dooku began a secessionist movement against the Republic that quickly picked up steam.

Hundreds of star systems rallied to Count Dooku's cause and for the first time in a thousand years, the Republic was in danger of fracturing. Because of these grievous events, the Senate instituted amendments that allowed Chancellor Palpatine to remain in office past his usual term, fearing that the election campaign process would weaken the Republic in a time of great need. Many senators felt the Republic needed a standing army in this time of crisis, and the Military Creation Act was proposed. Unfortunately, this divided the Republic even further due to the Loyalist party insisting that the creation of an army would only escalate matters.

Ten years after being elected Chancellor, Palpatine's worst fears came to fruition when the Jedi discovered Count Dooku's true intentions of waging war against the Republic. Fortunately, it seemed a Jedi by the name of Sifo-Dyas possessed the foresight to see the impending doom and collaborated with the cloners of Kamino and contracted the growth of a massive clone army for the Republic some ten years earlier. A quarter of a million troops were ready just as the Republic needed them and a million more were nearing completion. Representative Jar Jar Binks of Naboo called for emergency powers to be granted to Palpatine that would give him the privilege of approving the Military Creation Act uncontested as well as extend his term in the office of Chancellor until such time as he saw fit. As Palpatine's first executive order under the Emergency Powers Act, he approved the creation of the Grand Army of the Republic to counter the droid armies of the Confederacy of Independent Systems.

A handful of Jedi Knights hurried to Geonosis in an effort to rescue Obi-Wan Kenobi, Anakin Skywalker, and Senator Padme Amidala, who had been captured by Count Dooku and his allies and were to be executed. Some two-hundred Jedi faced off against the droid forces of the Separatists. Though they put forth a valiant effort, they were eventually overwhelmed. As the handful of remaining Jedi were about to be slaughtered, Palpatine's Grand Army led by Jedi Master Yoda swept in to their rescue. Clones met against droids on the desert plains of Geonosis, giving way to the Battle of Geonosis, igniting the Clone Wars.

For three years, Palpatine headed the Republic's military forces as their commander-in-chief with the Jedi Order acting as military leaders. Amendment after amendment was instated giving Palpatine more authority in military movements as the senators of the Republic proved inept military coordinators. In the closing days of the third year of the Clone Wars, in an act of desperation, Count Dooku led a massive fleet of Confederate warships, plunging into the core and laying siege to Coruscant. Dooku's supreme commander, General Grievous, personally led an ambush on the surface in an attempt to kidnap Supreme Chancellor Palpatine. The Chancellor was spirited away from his home at 500 Republica by the Jedi to his security bunker in the bowels of the city-planet. However, General Grievous had impeccable intelligence and cut them off at the bunker's entrance. Grievous made short work of the Jedi and took Palpatine into custody.

The forces of the Republic worked feverishly to reclaim the Chancellor, but Grievous managed to secure Palpatine onboard the Confederate flagship, the Invisible Hand. Imprisoned on the observation deck of the hulking warship, Palpatine watched as Count Dooku faced off with Obi-Wan Kenobi and Anakin Skywalker, who were attempting to rescue him. General Kenobi was incapacitated during the struggle, but the young Jedi Skywalker was stalwart and soundly defeated the Confederate leader in a duel to the death. Scooping up Kenobi, Skywalker and Palpatine made a daring escape from the clutches of the Separatists by seizing control of the Invisible Hand and crash-landing it on Coruscant surface.

Erosion of Civil Liberties

[Bluff +14] [Sense Motive +4]

The Empire wasn't born overnight, despite the fact that its declaration was. Over a period of nearly five years, Chancellor Palpatine cleverly manipulated the Senate into consolidating all power in the Office of the Chancellor. When Palpatine finally did declare himself Emperor, it was merely a formality, he already have full control of the Republic government.

Emergency Powers Act (24BBY): Gave chancellor the power to stay beyond his natural term of service and choose when to step down to allow elections again. Also gave him the power to declare martial law on planets in an effort to stop the Separatist Crisis.

Transit Tax (23 BBY): This tax on people traveling via registered starliners caused many refugees to be stranded on worlds ceding from the Republic, unable to afford the 15% tax on transit to a safer world.

Military Creation Act/Emergency Powers (22BBY): An expansion of the existing Emergency Powers Act, allowing the Chancellor greater latitude in dealing with the Separatist Crisis, including the creation of a Grand Army of the Republic.

Republic Executive Directive 93021-84121 (22BBY): Allowed Palpatine to seize all public and private holonet channels for government and military use.

Victory Rationing Orders and Regulation Plan/E-Marker (22BBY): Passed just after the start of the Clone Wars, designed to help preserve war materiel, specifically fuel rationing. Created an underground of people forging E-Rations for fuel, allowing Palpatine to crack down on the fringe elements harshly.

Senate Directive 3591 (22BBY): This directive authorized Chancellor Palpatine to commandeer any resource of group of resources in the Republic to help bring about a swift end to the Clone Wars. This directive was used to take over Spaarti Creations on Cartao, as well as many other facilities throughout the Republic.

Enhanced Security and Enforcement Act (21BBY): Centralized more of the Senate's power with the Chancellor, and allowed unwarranted search and seizure of citizens and their homes without due process, and the unrestricted use of surveillance droids.

Decree E49D139.41 (21BBY): Banned non-military cloning research throughout Republic member worlds. Decimated Khomm, Lur, Columbus and Arkania economically.

Statue 312b (21BBY): This constitutional amendment gave Core and Inner Rim worlds' votes great weight in the Senate than those from the Mid and Outer Rim.

Emergency Amendment 121b "Reflex Amendment" (20BBY): Cut yet more bureaucracy out of various government functions, centralizing more power. Also gave the Chancellor the power to interfere with local planet politics and install regional governors.

Core Worlds Security Act (20BBY): This act allowed the Core worlds to be patrolled openly by Clone Troopers in the streets in response to Anti-Core terrorism funded by the Separatists. Increased searches and seizures without due process, nearly putting the Core Worlds under martial law.

Security Act (19BBY): Passed days after the second Battle of Coruscant, this security act gave control of the Jedi High Council from the Senate directly to the Chancellor, who then appointed his own representative in Anakin Skywalker. It also removed Senate and Jedi oversight from the military and transferred it directly to the Chancellor.

Sector Governance Decree (19BBY): This amendment allowed greater power for Republic-installed regional governors, and created the position of Sector Moff, also appointed by the Chancellor.

Imperial Decree (19BBY): This was the official decree by which Palpatine was declared Emperor for life.

Emergency Military Powers Act (19BBY): A part of the Imperial Decree, allowing unprecedented military build-up. ⚡

Not long after, General Kenobi was dispatched to Utapau to eliminate General Grievous. Obi-Wan was successful in his mission, however when the Separatist threat had ended, the Jedi attempted a coup by cornering the Chancellor in his private quarters to carry out an assassination. The Jedi Knight Anakin Skywalker came to Palpatine's aid and was able to save the Chancellor's life, but Palpatine was far from unscathed. In the attempt on Palpatine's life, he was left horribly disfigured by the Jedi. In response to this treachery, Palpatine addressed the Senate, informing them that he planned to restructure the Republic into a Galactic Empire, to insure the safety and security of their way of life. He then declared the entire Jedi order as enemies of the Empire, ordering their immediate extermination. After appointing himself Emperor, Palpatine grew reclusive, overseeing the transition of the galactic government from his lofty palace under the protection of his red-robed Imperial Royal Guards.

Mas Amedda – Vice Chancellor of the Republic

Eleven years before the Clone Wars began, this blue-skinned Chagrian served in the Galactic Senate as the senator to his home world of Champala. Mas Amedda had a passion for history, procedure and possessed qualities that made him a commanding presence on the Senate floor. He was also a member of the Rim Faction – a group of senators that advocated the reduction in the Republic's governing power in individual planetary affairs in opposition to the Core Faction. As such, the leader of the Rim Faction, Senator Orn Free Taa, utilized his influence within the Senate to have Mas Amedda appointed as Vice Chancellor under Supreme Chancellor Valorum in the Galactic Senate. In this position of authority, Amedda could provide a subtle influence on the Chancellor to the Rim Faction's agenda.

Mas Amedda served as Vice Chancellor during the term of Valorum for one year when the Trade Federation debacle transpired at Naboo. The residing Queen of Naboo, Amidala, was brought before the Senate by Senator Palpatine of Naboo to plead her case. When little more than debate occurred, the young queen called for a Vote of No Confidence in Chancellor Valorum's leadership. Amedda was forced to maintain order in the Senate Rotunda while the motion was put forth and a ruling was met. After a brief voting process, Senator Palpatine was elected to serve as the new Supreme Chancellor of the Republic. Loyal to the Republic, Mas Amedda agreed to continue his position as Vice Chancellor under a new cabinet.

For nearly a decade Mas Amedda's unwavering loyalty to Republic law and its procedures earned him the disdain of many senators, but he quickly became one of Palpatine's most trusted colleagues. When the Separatist crisis began, Amedda was heavily called upon by Palpatine to provide council through the turmoil. When the Clone Wars began, Mas Amedda assisted the Supreme Chancellor in his wartime duties. Amedda even became privy to one of Palpatine's most guarded secrets – that he was the Dark Lord of the Sith, Darth Sidious. Because of Mas Amedda's passion for antiquities and history, he was drawn upon by Palpatine to procure various Sith artifacts from all over the galaxy. Amedda's knowledge of the Sith grew under Palpatine's guidance.

When Palpatine's plan unfolded and the Jedi were declared traitors, Amedda continued to serve Palpatine under the new rule of the Galactic Empire. Mas Amedda became Palpatine's personal liaison to the Imperial Senate, as well as his assistant in all matters. Amedda was among the first to be appointed to Palpatine's inner circle of the Imperial Ruling Council. The Chagrian remained under the service of the Emperor for over a decade after the New Order was declared. Amedda's whereabouts are unknown, but it is rumored that he was either ejected from his position or killed when the Emperor began his anti-alien agenda early on in the Galactic Civil War.

Sly Moore – Senior Administrative Aide to the Chancellor

Sly Moore was a mysterious Umbaran female who came into the limelight during the administration of Supreme Chancellor Palpatine. Like most Umbaran, she had an eerie calm and icy demeanor. Moore was appointed to succeed Senior Administrative Aide Sei Taria shortly following Palpatine's rise to the office of the Supreme Chancellor. Many speculated that Moore used her species' innate abilities of influence and persuasion to convince Taria to resign from her position and secure her rank in the Galactic Senate; however, these allegations had no real basis on fact.

As chief assistant to Supreme Chancellor Palpatine, Moore worked primarily behind the scenes. Sly would often arrange secret meetings and form clandestine agreements with various senators and governing bodies to accumulate more authority for her benefactor. One such instance took place during the crisis at Praesitlyn in the thirtieth month of the Clone Wars. Moore was given permission by Palpatine to offer Gliithnos senator Jannie Ha'Nook plenipotentiary ambassadorship in the Sluis sector provided she offer her full support to devote a compliment of Coruscant-based clonetroopers to the fight at Praesitlyn.

When the New Order was declared, Moore remained one of Palpatine's closet confidants. Moore had been aware of Palpatine's hidden agenda as well as his true identity almost from the start. She was admitted membership into the Emperor's Imperial Ruling Council. By the Emperor's will, Sly Moore's duties expanded to tracking down remaining Jedi Knights and other Force-sensitive individuals using a vast spy network. Moore used her intense powers of persuasion to corrupt any such individuals unfortunate enough to be located to the Dark Side. Those who resisted her allure were subsequently handed over to beings the likes of Darth Vader where they met with a gruesome fate. Sly Moore's fate is presently a mystery, although it can be speculated that she continued her work for the Emperor as Umbaran spies were used heavily during the Imperial reign.

Kinman Doriana – Chief Aide to the Chancellor

Kinman Doriana was one of Palpatine's chief aides throughout his political career, stretching all the way back to his bid for Senator of Naboo. Officially, Doriana kept Senator Palpatine's schedule, and also acted as his representative on other planets on observations and fact-finding missions. Unofficially, Doriana was contacted and employed by Darth Sidious, who used the shrewd man's guile and intellect to further his own mysterious ends. What Kinman Doriana did not know, however, was that Palpatine and Sidious were the same man. Kinman Doriana accompanied Palpatine often, even to unofficial functions. It was not at all uncommon for Doriana to sit alongside fellow aides of Palpatine such as Sate Pestage and Sly Moore while taking in an opera, as it was common practice for major political deals to be hammered out at high-class social functions. Doriana often went above and beyond his job title, it was even rumored that he entered into a relationship with Sei Tiera, aide to Chancellor Valorum, merely to gather information for Palpatine. When Palpatine was elected Chancellor, Doriana rose in rank with him, acting as one of his chief advisors.

Five years prior to the Clone Wars, Kinman Doriana was tasked by Darth Sidious to dispose of Outbound Flight, a large colony ship with over a dozen Jedi onboard. Doriana's goal required him to tax his skills of manipulation to their utmost, beginning with political maneuvering to get Outbound Flight launched, funded and crewed. Doriana managed to do this through a very complicated series of manipulations on the backward planet of Barlok. There he sent C'boath to negotiate a peace settlement between two opposing factions, while organizing a splinter group of one side to fire a missile attack on the peace summit. C'boath, of course, saved the day, and was hailed a hero throughout the Republic. C'boath's profile raised thus, it was politically impossible to deny him his Outbound Flight. Doriana convinced Palpatine to make him liaison to the Chancellor's office for Outbound Flight, giving him access to the passenger list and flight plan.

Doriana reported his findings to his master, revealing the passenger and crew list. Nineteen Jedi were onboard, including Obi-Wan Kenobi and Anakin Skywalker. Furious at the wrinkle in his plans, Sidious sent Doriana to continue his mission, but made note that Kenobi and Skywalker would have to be removed from the ship before the ambush took place. Doriana, using the alias Commander Stratis, met with Viceroy Siv Kav of the Trade Federation to organize the ambush along the known flight plan of Outbound Flight. His fleet consisted of six Techno Union Hardcell-Class transports and two Droid Control Ships possessed of three-thousand vulture droid fighters. While awaiting Outbound Flight, however, the fleet was challenged by Task Force Commander Thrawn of the Chiss Ascendancy, who was numerically inferior. Much to Doriana's protest, Viceroy Kav launched an all-out attack, and was summarily decimated by Thrawn, who then took Doriana, Kav and their crew as prisoners.

Knowing that failing to destroy Outbound Flight would mean his death, Kinman Doriana desperately tried to salvage the situation by convincing Commander Thrawn to destroy Outbound Flight for him. Doriana was able to convince Thrawn that the Jedi would mean trouble for the Chiss Ascendancy, and after a few days of comfortable imprisonment on his own ship, Doriana decided the only way to get his mission back on track was to reveal everything to Thrawn. Kinman Doriana informed Thrawn of a new galactic threat revealed to him by Darth Sidious, the Far-Outsiders, who would later become known as the Yuuzhan-

Vong. Doriana explained how the Republic was ill-equipped to deal with such a threat, and that Darth Sidious was undertaking a campaign to put the Republic in a position to defeat the Far-Outsiders. Doriana also explained how letting the Jedi-led Outbound Flight continue on its mission would invite contact with the Far-Outsiders too early, causing a galactic invasion long before the Republic would be prepared for it.

Then Doriana did the unthinkable, he contacted Darth Sidious in Thrawn's presence. Sidious confirmed everything Kinman Doriana had said, and Thrawn seemed convinced, Outbound Flight would not pass. Unfortunately for Doriana, Thrawn had devised an entirely different plan for dealing with Outbound Flight. Instead of destroying the vessel outright, he merely disabled every weapon system while launching his main assault against the Vagaari, a militant expansionist species that had been at war with the Chiss for years. Doriana realized that the Chiss Ascendancy had already had contact with the Yuuzhan Vong, and because it was tactically unsound to fight a battle on two fronts, needed to fully eliminate the threat of the Vagaari. However, Doriana's mission was saved when Thrawn's miscalculation of the power of the Force bore fruit. Thrawn contacted Master C'boath to accept his surrender, when the mad Jedi Master began Force choking Thrawn. Desperate, Doriana hit a red button on the console where he noticed Thrawn's finger had been hovering. In response, modified droid starfighters outfitted with radiation bombs crashed into Outbound Flight, killing nearly all onboard, and releasing the dark grip on Thrawn's throat.

Doriana was then brought before Chiss nobility, who wanted to charge Doriana, Thrawn and Jorj Car'das with a number of crimes, and negotiate who would claim the wreckage of Outbound Flight. Doriana watched with awe as Thrawn proved to be as adept in negotiation as he was in tactical command. Outbound Flight suddenly jumped into hyperspace, not to be heard from for over half a century. Doriana, Thrawn and Car'das were allowed to go free. Vicelord Kav was intent on killing Thrawn, as he clearly knew far too much to be allowed to live. While Kav, Thrawn and Doriana were alone, Kav pulled Doriana's blaster and tried to kill Thrawn. Unfortunately for Kav, a reverse-polarity shield had been erected, and the blaster bolt killed Vicelord Kav instead of his intended target. Alone, Thrawn revealed to Doriana that he had battled the Far Outsiders already, and provided him with a set of tactical readouts on Outsider craft to bring to Darth Sidious. Doriana returned to the Republic with Jorj Car'das, whom he worked with to set up a vast information network that would later be inherited by Talon Karrde.

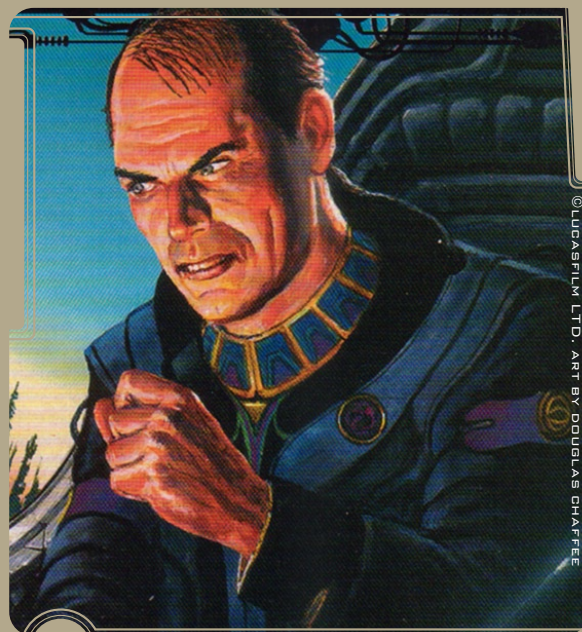

A month before the Clone Wars erupted, Doriana made an appearance on Amberdawn, a popular morning talk show focused on political commentary on Coruscant. There, he was responding to comments made by Brookish Boon, who asserted that the Loyalist Committee was nothing more than a shadow government. Doriana laughed the comment off, stating that it was not very deep in the shadows if someone as myopic as Brookish Boon had managed to spot it. Two weeks later he was at a Refugee Relief Movement fundraiser on Alsakan with Chancellor Palpatine and fellow Aide Sly Moore.

As the Clone Wars spread their fire throughout the galaxy, Kinman Doriana found himself thrust into the middle of the conflict by both of his masters. Palpatine frequently sent him to negotiate on his behalf or observe various assets and battlegrounds throughout the Republic, while Sidious often provided him with additional objectives to further his own manipulation of the war. The largest such mission came one year into the Clone Wars, when Doriana was sent to Cartao under the false mission of investigating the loss of a private citizen's company due to a poorly worded local law on behalf of Palpatine's office, to show the Chancellor was a man of the people, even during wartime. Covertly, however, Doriana's mission focused around Spaarti Creations, a special factory that, because of the indigent alien Cransoc, was able to completely retool overnight. This unique trait made the factory a potentially major asset to either side in the Clone Wars.

Doriana was led on a tour of the facilities, and after infecting some workers with a harmless bug, was able to call a quarantine on the factory due to an "outbreak" of Plyridian Plague. It was easy for Doriana to then strong-arm Lord Binale and Jedi Knight Jafer Torles into allowing a small group of Clones and Republic workers to covertly take over the plant for four weeks to construct several thousand new cloning cylinders, capable of growing clones in a tenth the time of their Kaminoan predecessors. Two weeks after the Republic began production of their new clone tanks, the Separatists attacked en force. The tide of battle changed hands several times as both sides fought without allowing any actual harm to come to the plant itself. Doriana kept in contact with Darth Sidious throughout the nearly three-week ordeal, working with him to manipulate both sides into exactly the position their plan required. During the final pitched battle, the Republic troops fell back on order of an assault shuttle crewed by several Jedi. However, both sides watched in horror as the shuttle, instead of attacking the Separatist positions, attacked the factory itself and then crashed directly into it. The resulting explosion killed all the skilled native Cransoc, and destroyed the factory, putting an end to the threat posed by Spaarti Creations.

In addition to destroying the factory, the Jedi were blamed for its needless destruction, which was sure to cause untold economic devastation for the entire Prackla Sector. The clone tanks themselves found their way to Palpatine's storehouse on Wayland and a Separatist stronghold on Saleucami. Kinman Doriana continued to serve Palpatine throughout the Clone

Wars, and survived the transition to the Galactic Empire with very little change to his position, remaining at the right-hand of Palpatine. In fact, it is believed he was the very first man to bear the name "Emperor's Hand," a role that, after his untimely death sometime leading up to the Galactic Civil War, was filled by many other beings, namely Mara Jade.

Dar Wac - Executive Administrator

Executive Administrator Dar Wac was one of many of Chancellor Palpatine's loyal aides. As with most of Palpatine's aides and advisors, Wac was often charged with controlling access to Palpatine by visitors to the Office of the Supreme Chancellor. Dar Wac was fiercely loyal to Palpatine, but it is believed he had no idea the man was actually a Sith Lord. Just prior to the Clone Wars, Dar Wac held the recently formed Loyalist Committee outside the Chancellor's office while he took a meeting with the Jedi. After a small measure of diplomatic stalling, Dar Wac interrupted the meeting to inform the Chancellor of his visitors. Palpatine ordered Wac to send them in, another typical day on Coruscant.

Twenty-two months into the Clone Wars, Senator Onaconda Farr of Rodia was accused of corruption when he bungled the defense of the Corellian Trade Spine. As a result of this, many Rodians in Coruscant politics were questioned and investigated, including Dar Wac. Fortunately, the loyal Executive Administrator was absolved of any wrongdoing, and was able to return to work shortly afterward. Fourteen months later, at the end of the Clone Wars, Dar Wac would be working in Palpatine's front office when Mace Windu, Kit Fisto, Saesee Tiin, and Agen Kolar would barge in to arrest the Chancellor. Dar Wac muttered a feeble protest before the Jedi called upon the Force, smashing him into a wall and knocking him unconscious for the duration of the attempted arrest.

Dar Wac maintained his position only shortly after the birth of the Galactic Empire. It is believed that, eventually, the advent of Human High Culture in the Core Worlds drove him back to his home world of Rodia. Executive Administrator Dar Wac's fate, however, is uncertain.

Sate Pestage - Advisor

Sate Pestage is perhaps the one man trusted by Darth Sidious, also known as Supreme Chancellor Palpatine. Of all the aides and advisors with access to Palpatine, Sate Pestage has been with him since before he became Senator of Naboo. Very few secrets were withheld from Pestage, and he was one of the very few to know of Palpatine's dual life. Pestage often was sent on assignment as a cleaner to maintain Palpatine's secret identity and prevent anyone from tracking the activities of Darth Sidious back to the Chancellor.

© LUCASFILM LTD.

One of many such assignments was undertaken nearly eleven years before the eruption of the Clone Wars. A Sando Aqua Monster had beached itself on Naboo, and in its fury at finding land, it uncovered one of Sidious' secret strongholds, which was soon discovered by Kroke Modbom and a man named Veermok, local to Naboo. In order to cover up the incident, Sate Pestage was sent to Naboo to strong-arm King Veruna and the Royal Security Forces into doing his bidding. An arrest order was put out for Kroke, who was then officially extradited to Coruscant, but mysteriously died during transit. Before taking off, however, Pestage went to the underground bunker himself to remove any connection to Sidious, as well as a few important Sith artifacts. During his covert activities, he stumbled across Veermok, who was trying to escape from then Lt. Panaka of the Royal Naboo Security Forces. Happy at the opportunity to tie up the final loose end, Pestage shot Veermok in seeming self-defense. While Panaka protested the incident, Pestage was able to apply leverage to King Veruna, and Sidious' secret lair was destroyed by a flight of Naboo N-1 Starfighters before a proper investigation could be performed.

Less than a year later, Pestage had returned to Coruscant and accompanied Senator Palpatine to most functions, while continuing to do his dirty work. He would stand by Palpatine at varied senate gatherings, such as Orn Free Taa's private viewing box at the Coruscant Opera, where he was able to check for listening devices, or a secret meeting with terrorist organization Nebula Front leader, Havac, to arrange the slaughter of Trade Federation delegates, which would put the Neimoidians firmly in control of the vast trade organization. Pestage was even present next to his master alongside Kinman Doriana at the Eriadu Trade Summit, where the assassination took place. Pestage personally was responsible for setting up "baseless" accusations of corruption against Supreme Chancellor Valorum when he sliced Orn Free Taa's personal computer and planted circumstantial evidence that Valorum had arranged the theft of several aurodium ingots.

After the Battle of Naboo, Pestage's patron had positioned himself to be elected new Supreme Chancellor of the Republic Senate. With this promotion for Palpatine, came the title of Controller of the Senate's Executive Agenda for Sate Pestage. This allowed him a longer arm with which to help Palpatine manipulate the Senate, but Pestage remained close to Palpatine, managing much of his day to day schedule over the following ten years. He even made public appearances and statements on the Chancellor's behalf, often to deny rumors on the Holonet about Palpatine's political policies or supposed declining health. Pestage served Palpatine loyally over the course of the Clone Wars, buying him time in his agenda when he had to make contact with minions as Darth Sidious, and running much of the day to day bureaucracy of the Republic. Pestage most contributed to Palpatine's cause, however, by expanding the emergency powers granted to him by the Senate at the onslaught of the Clone Wars. Pestage was renowned for his silver tongue, and persuaded many senators who were initially against centralizing any more power to the Office of the Chancellor to become whole-hearted supporters.

A month before the end of the Clone Wars, Pestage had the unenviable position of trying to keep many members of the Loyalist Committee from seeing the Chancellor. The Committee was hoping to convince Palpatine to lay down most of his emergency powers and restore democracy. Palpatine and Pestage often worked together to play small power games with those wishing to speak with the Chancellor. Pestage was more than willing to be seen as a bureaucratic roadblock while the Chancellor appeared friendly and more than willing to help. During many of these delaying tactics, Palpatine would suddenly happen across the waiting party, and act pleasantly surprised to see them before inviting them back to his office and telling them that he did not know they were waiting. Of course, after a day of waiting, even bodies as determined as the Loyalist Committee grow weary and are not at their most sharp.

A month later, Pestage was in a high level meeting with the Chancellor and the Jedi Council, and pointed out what a stalemate the war had become. Of all Palpatine's aides, Pestage tended to side with the Jedi most publicly, while siding against the Republic Senate. This was but one of the many subtle ploys Pestage performed for Sidious to further the divide between the Jedi and the people of the Republic. When Coruscant was finally assaulted by General Grievous, Pestage begged Chancellor Palpatine to accept the Jedi protection even as he protested its need to the Jedi. Days later, Mace Windu suspected Pestage of possibly being Darth Sidious, completely unaware it was actually Palpatine until Anakin Skywalker informed him a few days later.

Barely a week after the Battle over Coruscant, the Jedi were eliminated and Palpatine was declared Emperor for life. Pestage himself received another promotion alongside his master, and was named Grand Vizier, and given personal stewardship of the Ciutric Hegemony, a small cluster of planets. During the first week of the Galactic Empire's existence, Pestage was instrumental in transitioning elements of the Old Republic. He performed duties that varied widely, getting involved in matters as small as Squib attempts at salvaging Clone Wars orbital wrecks, to getting a full accounting of the death of each Jedi, and making a

There were many other Senators in the Old Republic that served in office during the Clone Wars, some of which are listed here.

Senator Eeshrin Ot'Hyne: This Caamasi Senator from Caamas was vehemently opposed to the Military Creation Act, going so far as to debate via article on the Holonet with Judicial Terrinald Screed.

Senator Galen Derlin: Father of future Alliance Major Bren Derlin, Senator Derlin served his homeworld of Tiisher-aaan as Senator during the Clone Wars. He was a known associate of Senator Bail Organa, and withdrew from politics as soon as the Galactic Empire was Declared. He was assassinated soon afterward.

Senator Aregram Tashrikam: Both Prince and Senator of his homeworld of Grizmallt, Tashrikam and his father were close associates of both Chancellor Palpatine and Senate Vice-Chair Mas Amedda. Senator Tashrikam's support continued throughout the reign of the Empire. He was killed by Palpatine years later after asking to be elevated to the rank of Moff.

Senator Zafiel Snopps: Consummate businessman and Senator of Corulag, representing the entire Bormea Sector, Senator Snopps was a staunch supporter of Palpatine. His loyalty earned Corulag an Imperial Academy as soon as the Empire was declared, and a promotion to Governor. ⚡ list of those whose fate was unknown. He also reported updates on ongoing projects to Palpatine, including the elimination of anti-imperial officers taken in from the Old Republic, and the dispatch of 501st Stormtrooper Legion troops to New Plympto to decimate the rebellion forming there.

Of course, with the rise of the Empire, there was a new Sith Apprentice, Lord Vader. Grand Vizier Pestage took his public demotion to Palpatine's third in command rather well, even serving alongside Vader in some instances, though this was perhaps because Pestage remained Palpatine's most trusted confidante. In one instance, Pestage was sent to Alderaan alongside Lord Vader to ensure the death or capture of Senator Fang Zar, and to evaluate both Bail Organa's loyalty, and Vader's emotional state. Pestage reported on all three matters directly to the Emperor.

For well over the next two decades, Pestage served Palpatine ably, and to protect his most trusted aide, Palpatine had a clone decoy grown from a Spaarti cloning cylinder. The Clone was considered rather insane, and was kept in stasis for a time until just before the destruction of the second Death Star at Endor. Upon the death of Palpatine, the true Pestage followed his master's spirit to Jeng Droga on Kaal and brought Jeng Droga to the Emperor's Sanctuary on Byss in the Deep Core. There he was able to follow arcane rituals to transfer Palpatine's spirit into one of the Emperor's prepared clone bodies.

Together, the two watched as Pestage's clone took over the remnants of the Empire alongside Director of Imperial Intelligence Ysanne Isard. Pestage's clone had several run-ins with Rogue Squadron, and was eventually killed by Admiral Krennel after trying to defect to the New Republic, who had granted him asylum after he found out Isard was trying to supplant him. Then, six years after the apparent death of Emperor Palpatine, Pestage and Palpatine brought the Empire back in full force with a new super weapon, the Galaxy Gun. Sate Pestage was finally killed when the galaxy gun destroyed Byss due to rebel sabotage.

Finis Valorum – Former Supreme Chancellor of the Republic

Finis Valorum came from an ancient lineage of noblemen and government officials. During his political career, Valorum served as the senator of the Lytton sector for a number of years before being appointed to the cabinet of Chancellor Kalpana some twenty years before the Clone Wars began. He held a number of political achievements, including acting as a negotiator during the Stark Hyperspace War. Like those in his family before him, Valorum lacked initiative and opted to follow procedure even when it may have not been the best course of action.

When Chancellor Kalpana's term in office had expired a year later, Valorum ran for office and with the help of those such as the Tarkin family and the Core Faction of senators he won the election, becoming Kalpana's successor as Supreme Chancellor of the Republic. Many believed that Finis attained this position based solely on his heritage and connections, not his actual political acumen. Despite lacking a charismatic demeanor and neglecting to deflect a myriad of negative claims against his person, Valorum was re-elected and served two four-year terms consecutively. It was in the beginning of his second term that Chancellor Valorum was first introduced to Senator Palpatine of Naboo, and the two quickly became allies. This allegiance would falter years later, however.

Ten years before the Clone Wars gripped the galaxy after a fierce struggle between the Trade Federation and the Nebula Front, Palpatine and Valorum devised a bill that would instate heavy taxes on free trade routes throughout the galaxy in an effort to appease the Front while also assisting in the reduction the Republic's galactic debt. Outraged, the Trade Federation established an embargo on Palpatine's home planet of Naboo in effort to establish negotiations to eliminate the trade tax. One of Valorum's trusted Jedi political advisors, Adi Gallia, learned of this incident very early on and Valorum dispatched Jedi Master Qui-Gon Jinn and his apprentice Obi-Wan Kenobi to Naboo to force a settlement with the Trade Federation. In a startling move, the Trade Federation attempted to kill the Jedi and promptly invaded the planet, occupying its capital of Theed and imprisoning the Naboo people.

The resident Queen of Naboo, Amidala, managed to escape with the help of the Jedi and retreated to Coruscant to plead their case to the Senate. Valorum understood her plight and was eager to help. However, when the case was brought before the Senate the delegates of the Trade Federation demanded a commission be sent to Naboo to verify the Queen's claims, possibly delaying the motion for weeks or even months. Valorum being a stickler for procedure agreed to the Trade Federation senator's demands, but Amidala would have nothing of the sort. The Naboo Queen, acting on the suggestion from Senator Palpatine, called for a vote of no confidence in Valorum's leadership.

Unable to reach a dissolution, and unwilling to see his cabinet members forced from their positions by an election process, Valorum took the only remaining option and resigned as Chancellor. For over two years Valorum lived in seclusion from the galaxy at large. After emerging from his isolation, Finis began work with the Refugee Relief Movement on Alderaan and came to know Bail Organa. He also wrote and published his autobiography, entitled Holding Back the Tide.

Sixteen months after the Battle of Geonosis gave way to the Clone Wars, an attack was made on Bail Organa's life by space pirates. Valorum returned to Coruscant to provide council to his old friend Bail Organa while voicing his concerns for the state of the Republic. The former Chancellor had come to believe that it was Palpatine that was ultimately behind the attacks on Organa - hoping that with Organa out of the way, the newly proposed Security and Enforcement Act would more easily be made into law. Upon conclusion of his meeting with the Alderaanian senator, he took his leave onboard his private transport the Star of Iskin. Mere moments after take-off, the transport exploded, killing Valorum and all onboard. The Confederacy was publicly blamed for Valorum's death, although Organa began to have his suspicions about Palpatine. Shortly after his death, Finis Valorum was honored by the Republic with the Finis Valorum Memorial that was erected in Monument Square.

Ask Aak – Republic Senator of Malastare

The representative of the planet Malastare, Ask Aak was sworn into office after his predecessor Senator Aks Moe was killed in a horrific traffic accident that was perpetrated by Separatist assassins two months before the Clone Wars began. Ask Aak was quickly counted among those of the Loyalist Committee, heavily supporting Palpatine. Like his predecessor, Ask Aak was an extremely vocal member of the senate, passionately speaking on his views on the Senate floor. Ask Aak was a major proponent of the Military Creation Act in the few months he held his position before the Clone Wars.

While attending the funeral of his forerunner, Ask Aak and the other members of the procession were ambushed by a mob of Dug activists, protesting the treatment of the native Dugs on Malastare. Ask Aak was whisked away by his security team as the protestors flew pod racers through the memorial tapestry, desecrating the procession as the family and friends of Aks Moe looked on in horror. Malastare had long been mired in disputes between the original inhabitants of the planet and the Grans who laid settlement the world. Aks Moe had been seen as a butcher to many Dugs on Malastare. This reputation unequivocally rubbed off on his successor as members of the Dugs-for-Democracy movement stood outside the Senate Rotunda protesting his appointment to the Senate.

The following month, Ask Aak was forced to deal with increasing hostility on his homeworld. Several bomb threats had been made on a major starport in Pixelito. To quell any possible act of violence, Ask Aak ordered that all Dugs employed at Port Pixelito to be laid off from work. In order to offset the shortage in laborers from the void created by over sixty percent of their workers being put on suspension, Ask Aak negotiated a deal with the Trade Federation. In a public display of good will, the Trade Federation donated forty-five thousand surplus PK droids to assist the Port Pixelito Authority.

In the days leading up to the Clone Wars, Ask Aak accompanied his fellow Loyalist Committee members to a private meeting with Supreme Chancellor Palpatine. A transmission from Jedi Knight Obi-Wan Kenobi had been received by the Jedi Council attesting to a massive droid army being assembled by the Separatists on Geonosis. Ask Aak insisted that there was no other course of action but to force the Military Creation Act into law. Unfortunately the Senate was still split on the matter and the majority would most likely oppose it. Senate Speaker Mas Amedda proposed that Chancellor Palpatine be granted emergency powers so that he could approve the Military Creation Act uncontested. Ask Aak was fully in favor of this move, but it came to Representative Jar Jar Binks of Naboo to propose the Emergency Powers Act.

During the Clone Wars, much of Ask Aak's time was occupied by military matters conducted by the Senate Oversight Committee. Although he was in favor of the Military Creation Act and the utilization of a clone army in the name of the Republic, Ask Aak had reservations about the Jedi and their part in the war. The senator felt that the Jedi vow as peace keepers had nothing to do with partaking in military matters and that appointing them as commanders in the war was a poor decision. Ask Aak was already particularly vocal about his views and was very opinionated at how the war with the Separatists should be fought, which only worsened after the midpoint of the war.

The Jedi led a campaign on the planets of Jabiiim and Parcelus Minor and suffered horrendous defeats at the hands of the Confederacy and its allies throughout the fifteenth and sixteenth months of the Clone Wars. This merely served as fuel to Ask Aak's argument that the Jedi were out of their league and took particular skepticism towards Jedi Master Oppo Rancisis. In the seventeenth month of the war, former Supreme Chancellor Valorum was assassinated in a starship bombing on Coruscant and Ask Aak saw it as the last straw. In response to the increasingly daring moves being made by the Separatists on the lives of political members of the Republic the Security and Enforcement Act was proposed, and Ask Aak became champion to this proposed amendment.

Bail Organa – Alderaan Viceroy and Republic Senator

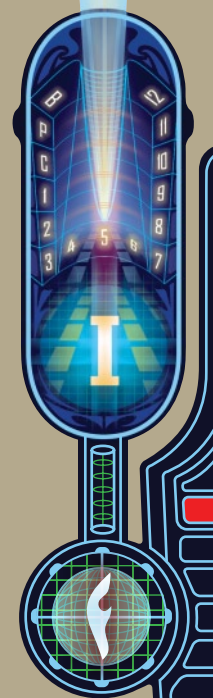

This senator was born Bail Prestor Organa some forty-seven years before the onset of the Clone Wars. From an early age Bail had been groomed and prepared to take a seat in the Republic Senate for his home planet. When Bail was a young politician the position of Alderaan's Viceroy became open and controversy over the lineage of ascendancy to the throne. Several Royal families held claims to the Alderaanian Royal throne but even through political maneuvering and lobbying of each family, the planet's government was unable to decide on a candidate to the throne.

The Jedi Order was forced to step in at the behest of Chancellor Finis Valorum to help resolve the matter. Jedi Master Jorus C'baoth was dispatched and after much deliberation, the tribunal decided that the Royal House of Organa was chosen to assume the throne. As Prince of the House Organa, Bail Organa became the Viceroy and First Chairman of the planet Alderaan with his wife Brea serving by his side as Queen. He also succeeded his father-in-law, Bail Antilles, as Senator of Alderaan in the Republic's Galactic Senate.

Bail Organa served Alderaan on the Galactic Senate for nearly a decade when the threat of the Clone Wars emerged. During his term in the Senate he fought hard for the rights of immigrants and refugees. He heavily supported the Refugee Relief Movement and it was here that he came into contact with like-minded individuals such as Senators Padmé Amidala of Naboo, Mon Mothma of Chandrilla, and Silya Shessaun of Thesme. Over the years, Bail had established himself as a senator of the highest caliber, and was appointed to the Loyalist Committee by Supreme Chancellor Palpatine.

ASK AAK

Approximately one year before the Clone Wars, Bail Organa had managed to loosen the immigration restriction on his homeworld to ease the increasing numbers of refugees coming to the Republic for aid when the Separatist crisis began forcing them from their homes. He was champion to the less fortunate citizens of the Republic and defended their rights in the Senate by strictly opposing any bill that was brought to the table that took advantage of the impoverished. Organa was extremely vocal in his opposition of the Military Creation Act, which called for the formation of a standing Republic army in case the Separatist conflict erupted into war. Bail was convinced that the scission wouldn't lead to outright conflict and that the creation of such an army would only escalate tension between the Republic and the newly formed Separatist group.

When the Separatist's intentions to secede from the Republic forcibly became apparent, Bail quieted his concerns on the Military Creation Act. He was an avid supporter of Chancellor Palpatine and didn't object when Representative Jar Jar Binks of Naboo called for the vote on the Emergency Powers Act, an amendment that would grant the Chancellor more authority over the Republic without question from the Senate. Before he knew it, the Clone Wars were under way, and military strategy had become part of his day-to-day agenda as a member of the Senate Oversight Committee. Bail began spending less of his time in the Senate on matters of state, and more on fleet coordination and strategy with Palpatine and the Jedi Order.

As the Clone Wars progressed, a greater number of decisions on the war were placed by Chancellor Palpatine as the voices of the Senators were slowly stripped away by amendment after amendment. Bail Organa was appointed to oversee collateral effects of the war by devoting his attention to the increasing amount of pirate activity that had been taking advantage of the Republic's focus on battling with the Confederacy. During the seventeenth month of the Clone Wars, Bail Organa was ambushed by pirates and his ship was boarded. He was able to send out a distress signal, and it was answered by Jedi Masters Adi Gallia and Plo Koon. Through their combined efforts they were able to defeat the pirates and continue their mission battling pirates near Varonat.

Due to this personal attack on Organa's life, the Senate passed the Security and Enforcement Act, yielding more powers to the Supreme Chancellor. Organa protested this amendment but his voice was drowned out by the thousands of senators that were in favor of the bill, claiming Organa was skirting on treason for his words. Following the session Organa was counseled by the former Supreme Chancellor Finis Valorum and was urged to be mindful of Palpatine, and that the residing Chancellor was not to be trusted. Shortly after their meeting, Valorum was killed in a shuttle bombing that was covered by the media as a terrorist bombing. Organa began to grow wary of Chancellor Palpatine.

In the thirty-second month of the Clone Wars, Bail Organa received a distress call onboard his warship Intervention from General Obi-Wan Kenobi and Anakin Skywalker. The two had just encountered the Separatist commanders Asajj Ventress and Durge and escaped with information that could prove vital to the Confederates' whereabouts. After an analysis of the information the Jedi had obtained they learned that the Separatists had a fleet of warships stationed on the graveyard planet of Boz Pity. The warship needed to jump in closer to the planet to avoid an outright confrontation with the enemy vessels so Anakin Skywalker plotted the hyperspace jump. However, Skywalker made a minor mistake in the calculations and the Intervention jumped out of hyperspace too close to the planet's atmosphere and the Republic ship was forced to crash land on the surface. Bail joined in on the fighting with the Jedi against the Confederate forces. While the Jedi suffered heavy losses including Jedi Masters Adi Gallia and Soon Baytes, Boz Pity was won and became a staging point for the Republic's Outer Rim Sieges.

Organa was among a group of senators that had grown wary of the Clone Wars as well as Palpatine and his emergency powers. A petition was created pleading the Chancellor to relinquish his emergency powers and reopen diplomacy with the Confederacy so that a peaceful resolution could be met. The petition was signed by nearly two-thousand senators of the Republic and was aptly named the Petition of Two-thousand. Those who had signed this document were considered the Delegation of Two-thousand. This delegation was looked on by the other senators of the Republic as traitors. When Palpatine refused to the terms of this petition opting to stay the course and see the war with the Confederates through to the end, Bail began meeting secretly with several members of the Delegation of Two-thousand in his apartment named Cantham House to discuss the possibility of breaking away from the Republic and siding with neither the Republic nor the Confederacy. No conclusions were met, and Amidala warned Organa to tread lightly about the matter.

When a full-scale assault was launched by the Confederacy on the Republic capital of Coruscant in the final days of the Clone Wars, Bail was staying in his apartment at the Senate Apartment Complex. During the chaos he accompanied the Chandrillan senator Mon Mothma, and Padmé Amidala to the Senate's bomb shelters located deep within the bowels of the city-planet. On their way they ran into Jedi Masters Shaak-Ti and Stass Allie who were attempting to locate the Chancellor, and the Jedi lent their speeder to the senators. Bail piloted the air speeder through the skyways of Coruscant towards the shelter, but they were ambushed by Confederate vulture droids. Their transport was hit by enemy fire and Bail was forced to crash land the speeder in an isolated square. Amidala and Organa took up arms against a swarm of battle droids, strategically retreating and taking cover to bring their attackers out into the open. Once Bail and Padmé had achieved their goal, an air strike from Republic gunships decimated the droids allowing the senators to make it to the safety of the shelters for the remainder of the battle.

In the days following the Second Battle of Coruscant, the Jedi Temple on Coruscant came under siege from an unknown attacker. Bail Organa raced to the temple to provide whatever assistance he could. When he arrived he discovered that the 501st clone trooper legion were the aggressors and claimed that the Jedi were staging a revolt. Organa watched helplessly as Republic clone troopers gunned down Padawan Zett Jukassa in his attempt to flee the carnage. Organa fled the scene under duress and vowed to do what he could to prevent any more Jedi from falling into this catastrophe.

Organa took flight in his personal courier ship, Tantive IV, in search of any Jedi survivors. He successfully located and rescued Jedi Master Yoda after the miniature Jedi Master escaped from his own troops attempting to kill him on Kashyyyk. The pair then came into contact with Obi-Wan Kenobi who had evaded similar events on Utapau. Organa informed the two Jedi of the massacre at the Jedi Temple and Kenobi and Yoda devised a plan to infiltrate the temple to disable the emergency beacon calling all Jedi back to Coruscant where they'd be falling into a trap.

While in orbit over Coruscant, Organa was informed of a special convening of the Senate. While Obi-Wan and Yoda gained entrance to the Jedi Temple to modify the beacon to warn any surviving Jedi away from the capital, Organa headed to the Senate Rotunda. In this session, Chancellor Palpatine claimed that the Jedi Order had attempted to assassinate him. He deemed all Jedi as enemies of the Republic and ordered their immediate extermination. With his vast emergency powers obtained during the course of the Clone Wars, he then declared himself Emperor and the Republic as the Galactic Empire.

Bail Organa was then contacted by Yoda and informed that Palpatine was in fact a Sith Lord and must be eliminated at all costs. However, Yoda failed in his attempt to defeat Palpatine and was forced to flee. Organa facilitated Yoda's escape from the Senate Rotunda where he had faced the newly crowned Emperor by swooping in on his personal airspeeder and ferrying Yoda off to safety. Organa then smuggled Yoda off world once more.

It seemed that Kenobi was more successful in his task to eliminate his former Padawan turned Sith Apprentice, Anakin Skywalker. Although senator Padmé Amidala was caught in the middle of the conflict and suffered Skywalker's wrath. Injured and weak, Padmé was spirited away by Kenobi to the Polis Massan medical center deep within an asteroid field and Organa and Yoda hurried to Amidala's side. However, Amidala's injuries compounded by her grief were too much and she succumbed to them. The Polis Massans induced labor on the dying senator in effort to save her unborn child. Much to the surprise to all those involved, Padmé gave birth to twins. Bail Organa, Obi-Wan Kenobi and Yoda conversed to determine the best course of action on keeping the twins – Leia and Luke – out of harm's way. Bail volunteered to take Leia as his own daughter, as he and his wife Brea had been attempting to conceive a child and had been unsuccessful. The two Jedi decided that Luke would be best placed with his family on Tatooine. Organa also came into the ownership of Amidala's droids: See Threepio and Artoo Deetoo.

From this point on, Bail heeded the warning Padmé had told him months earlier and played the part of the 'good little senator'. Openly he supported Palpatine and the Republic, but behind closed doors he supported the formation of an Alliance to Restore the Republic between several worlds including Alderaan, Chandrilla and Corellia. Various members of the Delegation of Two-thousand were now looked at as possible traitors of the Empire and began seeing treatment as such. One such instance was Sern Prime's senator Fang Zar. Zar had been under suspicion of acts of treason, was under investigation by the Empire, and restricted from leaving Coruscant until the so-called investigation was completed. Organa saw to it that Zar was smuggled off of Coruscant and brought to Alderaan to seek refuge until such time he could be ferried back to Sern Prime. One month after the creation of the Empire, however, Organa received a guest from the Empire: Darth Vader – Dark Lord of the Sith and emissary to Emperor Palpatine. Vader had discovered Zar's whereabouts and came to Alderaan to collect the fugitive. Organa had already arranged for a group of smugglers to sneak Zar back to his home planet and were in the process of loading their secret cargo when Vader arrived on Alderaan. The Dark Lord assaulted the senator and his couriers on a landing platform of the Royal Palace on Alderaan. The crew members of the smuggler vessel Drunk Dancer were successful in escaping with their lives. Fang Zar, however, was not so fortunate and was struck down by Lord Vader before he could board the ship. Organa was questioned heavily regarding the matter of harboring a fugitive of the Empire, but was ultimately dismissed as being uninformed of Zar's criminal status and therefore not at fault.

For over a decade Bail Organa worked to bring the Alliance to Restore the Republic to reality. He envisioned a day when his

There were many other Senators in the Old Republic that served in office during the Clone Wars, some of which are listed here.

Senator Canny Mandary Bertar: This cagey Mrlssi Senator represented her homeworld of Mrlsst as well as the entire Tapani Sector during the Clone Wars, and was the Chairbeing of the Senate Dispensation Committee, overlooking Republic, and later Imperial, expenditures on freelance agents on a variety of assignments.

Senator Elshah'Sai'Moro: A Devaronian Co-Senator to the planet Devaron with friend Vien'Sai'Mallock, Elshah was close friends with Jedi Master T'ra Saa. When Elshah found out her fellow delegate was supporting a Separatist base on Devaron in secret, she contacted her Jedi friend, but not before being assassinated by Aurra Sing at Vien'Sai'Mallock's order.

Senator Havriso Looruya: Representative of Yir Tangee and member of the Loyalist Committee, Senator Looruya was later accused of corruption by Senator Onaconda Farr. The allegations were confirmed by the Judicial Department, who found the Senator guilty of funding secessionist movements on Ando and Sluis Van. ☹️

Rebel Alliance could publicly renounce the Empire and have the military might to defend themselves from the consequences. Organa forged as many bonds with surviving Jedi as possible, including the former Caamasi Jedi Knight Ylenic It'kla. The Caamasi Jedi had become a Trustant to his people when Palpatine destroyed their home planet in an act of retaliation for supposed treasonous acts against the Empire. It'kla served as a personal advisor to Bail Organa in the Royal Palace in Alderaan's capital city of Aldera.

Fourteen years after the Clone Wars had ended, Bail Organa, former Chandrillan senator Mon Mothma, and former Corellian senator Garm Bel Iblis finalized their preparations and the Rebel Alliance was officially created. The fledgling militant group began conducting hit and fade operations on key locations of the Galactic Empire. After several atrocities had occurred at the hands of the Empire such as the Massacre of Ghorman, the Rebel cause was bolstered by the defection of several high-ranking officials in the Imperial military such as Jan Dodonna and Carlist Rieekan. The first great victory for the Rebellion came at Toprawa in the Outer Rim when a Rebel guerilla team led by Commander Bria Tharen managed to successfully obtain detailed construction plans to the Empire's super-weapon – the Death Star.

Bail's adoptive daughter Leia had long been a member of Organa's secret cause and obtained the transmission of the Death Star plans. Bail sent Leia on a mission to recruit former Jedi General Obi-Wan Kenobi to the Rebel's cause and deliver the Death Star plans to the Alliance high command so it could be analyzed for a possible attack. Unfortunately Leia was captured by Darth Vader and the crew of the Tantive IV, including Bail's brother-in-law Raymus Antilles, were slaughtered. Leia had succeeded in stowing the technical read-outs of the Death Star into Artoo Deetoo's memory banks and facilitated the droids' escape.

In retaliation for Leia Organa's treachery, and as an intimidation tactic for her to divulge the location of the Rebel base, Grand Moff Tarkin brought the Death Star to Alderaan and threatened to destroy it if Leia did not talk. Even though Leia relinquished a location that was ultimately bogus, Tarkin had no intention of sparing her home planet. Tarkin planned on demonstrating the might of the Empire by making an example of Alderaan which had been long suspected as a world of Rebel sympathizers. Tarkin gave the order and Leia was forced to watch her home and everyone she knew, including her father Bail Organa, be destroyed. Tarkin's plan backfired in the end, as Alderaan became a symbol of the tyranny of the Empire and Bail Organa a martyr of the Rebel Alliance cause.

Bana Breemu – Republic Senator of Humbarine

Bana Breemu served as senator to the Humbarine sector in the Galactic Senate during the Clone Wars. She was one of the members of the Loyalist Committee before the Clone Wars began, and had hoped to find a diplomatic solution to the Separatist threat rather than resorting to large-scale conflict. Humbarine was one of the founding planets of the Republic some twenty-five millennia ago and bolstered massive local military forces along its borders near the Hydian Way. It came as no surprise that Humbarine bared the impact of the Confederacy's might during the Clone Wars. Two years into the Clone Wars, the sector's capital planet of Humbarine was assaulted by the Confederacy. General Grievous led his fleet of warships, beating back Humbarine's defense fleet and bombarded the planet for over an hour until every single inhabitant of the world perished and the very crust of the planet itself had become molten metal and rock.

Bana Breemu pleaded her territory's case to the Galactic Senate, desperately looking for disaster relief and military assistance for the off world survivors of Humbarine and the displaced residents of the planets that made up the rest of the Humbarine sector. Despite Humbarine's former importance to the Republic, with its fleets demolished and its industries crushed, Humbarine was of little concern to Senate. Breemu found the planets which she served pushed to the waste side. Simply too many of her worlds had been overtaken by the Separatists and the Republic was unwilling to dedicate military strength to what was widely considered as a lost cause.

In the final weeks of the Clone Wars, Breemu found herself as one of the signatories of the Petition of Two-thousand and became one of the members of its delegation. She began attending covert meetings at Bail Organa's Cantham House on Coruscant to discuss the formation of an organization that came to be known as the Alliance to Restore the Republic. Bana was a cautious woman, however, and urged her peers to tread lightly on what could easily be construed as treason. When Senator Padmé Amidala of Naboo entertained the idea of bringing the Jedi Order into their assemblies, Breemu felt it was too risky. She felt the best course of action was to present the Petition of Two-thousand to Chancellor Palpatine and vie for his acceptance to its terms and relinquish his emergency powers.

Bana Breemu's whereabouts are currently unknown, but it is assumed she continued to serve in the Galactic Senate on behalf of Humbarine when the Republic was restructured into the Galactic Empire. It is also likely that by signing the Petition of Two-thousand, Breemu had effectively signed her own death warrant. Many senators who made their mark on the document were later seen as traitors of the Empire and were put under investigation. The majority investigated were found guilty and were imprisoned and/or died under questionable circumstances.

Chi Eekway – Republic Senator of Wroona

Senator Chi Eekway was known for her incredible empathy toward all beings, which was thought to border on the supernatural. She was close friends with fellow Senator and mentor Terr Taneel of Neelanon and the enigmatic Baron Papanoida, and had a taste for Aqualish Hoi-Broth. She was the elected senator of the sector containing Wroona and Bestine IV, and was able to lead her people ably; a shock, considering most of those she represented were pirates and vagabonds. She carefully balanced her time between her home sector and Coruscant, not wanting to lose touch with her constituents.

Throughout the Clone Wars, Chi Eekway served on Palpatine's Loyalist Committee, a group of trusted senators chosen to help advise the Chancellor on the events sweeping the galaxy.

She served proudly, but had exponentially growing concern for the consolidation of power in the office of the Chancellor. A month before the end of the Clone Wars, she traveled from her isolated home sector to Coruscant, risking much danger as she flew through CIS controlled space along the Corellian Trade Spine. There, Chi and the Loyalist Committee gathered and met with the Chancellor in effort to help convince him to give up some of his emergency powers, particularly the Enhanced Security and Enforcement Act, now that Count Dooku was dead.

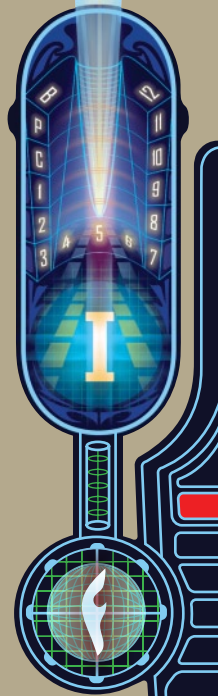

Chi Eekway, along with Senators Bail Organa, Padmé Amidala, Mon Mothma, Terr Taneel, Fang Zar and Bana Breemu, were initially shut out of the Chancellor's office by Sate Pestage. Fortunately, the Chancellor caught site of them in the hall and invited them in. Bail Organa spoke on behalf of the Committee, but Chi Eekway managed to express some concerns as well. The Chancellor disagreed that Count Dooku's death signaled the end of the Clone Wars, but promised to abide by any measured agreed upon in the Senate. Chi Eekway and her fellow committee members became disheartened, realizing that Palpatine's control of the super-majority in the Senate would see to it that any vote they brought up would be squashed in the Senate.

So it was that Chi Eekway dedicated her time to bringing all of her personal resources to bear to bringing a swift end to the violence, in order to hasten a return to democracy. She often met with information broker Baron Papanoida, who passed along intelligence of dubious origin, which she then made certain found its way to the Jedi Council. Mere days before the end of the Clone Wars, Chi was contacted by Papanoida to meet at the Coruscant Opera House. She brought along her confidante and fellow Senator, Terr Taneel, and met the Baron in his private box to watch the Mon Calamari show. The Baron informed her that his contacts suggested that General Grievous and the Confederacy were not in fact on Utapau. Chi Eekway quickly passed this information along, though she soon discovered that it had turned out to be false after reports of Obi-Wan Kenobi's successful mission to the sinkhole planet.

Chi Eekway was also present in Padmè Amidala's apartment during the signing of the Petition of the 2000, which was presented to Chancellor Palpatine later that day. During the meeting, Padmè wished to inform the Jedi Council of their petition and seek their support, but Chi Eekway cautioned against it, urging patience. Her hope was that a show of solidarity among two-thousand Senators would curb Palpatine's power-hoarding and restore a modicum of dignity to the Senate, as their power had recently been stripped due to the Direct Governance Bill. Chi Eekway was concerned of reports of Republic Governors being sent to most Republic planets along with a full Regiment of Clone troopers. She feared martial law in the galaxy's future, and hoped the petition would put a stop to it.

When Palpatine declared himself Emperor and Chi Eekway watched as sixty-three fellow delegates that signed the Petition of two-thousand were arrested, she continued to stress patience even as she swore loyalty to the Emperor. She became even more determined to undermine the Empire from within, and worked in secret alongside Bail Organa, Mon Mothma and Garm Bel Iblis. Senator Eekway contributed much in the form of intelligence, primarily from Baron Papanoida. Her fate is unknown.

Fang Zar – Republic Senator of the Sern Sector

Fang Zar was the long-standing Senator representing the Sern Sector of the Colonies Region, and hailed from the political capital of the sector, Sern Prime. Zar was a man of his sector, and in addition to his apartment on Coruscant, he maintained estates on Sern Prime and Ghorman within his home-sector. He was considered gruff and outspoken, but exceedingly idealistic. Senator Zar found a close friend in the like-minded Senator Garm Bel Iblis of Corellia, and the much more subtle Senator Bail Organa of Alderaan. During the years leading up to the Clone Wars, he was appointed to the Loyalist Committee, and also grew close with Mon Mothma and Padmè Amidala.

When the Clone Wars erupted, Senator Fang Zar did his best to support democracy and the constitution, but was saddened as he watched amendment after amendment get shredded as the Chancellor gained more direct control over the government. The Clone Wars also separated him from his good friend, Garm Bel Iblis, when the Corellian Senator invoked an ancient clause that allowed him to withdraw his sector into isolationism.

Just less than two years into the Clone Wars, when Duro fell to Durge's Lance, Senator Zar was asked by Garm to plead for Republic military aid. Senator Zar was opposed by Senator Orn Free Taa of Ryloth, and his motion to send aid to defend Corellia was not passed. Fang Zar felt the Republic foolish not to defend its own doorstep, as Corellia was a very short hyperspace jump from Coruscant itself, but the Republic felt that Corellia deserved what it had coming, since they went into hiding as soon as the war started. Fortunately for Senator Zar, the Confederacy had no interest in taking the Corellian Sector, and instead consolidated their holdings along the Corellian Trade Run.

A month before the end of the Clone Wars, Senator Zar worked with Bail Organa and Padmè Amidala to convince the Chancellor to give back some of his emergency powers. The group was given the run-around by the Chancellor's office, but eventually was able to meet with him. They asked Palpatine specifically to lay down the Enhanced Security and Enforcement Act, but Palpatine suggested they raise such motions in the Senate Hall, and let the people decide. Fang Zar specifically asked if the remaining Outer Rim Territories occupied by the Separatists might just be ceded to them to end the hostilities and return to negotiation, but Palpatine thought such an idea villainous, citing his compassion for the loyal Republic citizens in the Outer Rim being crushed under Separatist boots.

Fang Zar spent the next month meeting with several senators in Bail Organa and Padmè Amidala's apartments on Coruscant. There they discussed possible ways to reign in the powers of the Chancellor, ranging from petitions to open rebellion. The group finally settled to first try a petition, which they had signed by two-thousand senators who also opposed the new Direct Governance Act. Fang Zar was present when the petition was delivered to Palpatine, who, again, rebuffed the concerned Senators. However, before they group of politicians could consider further options, the Clone Wars were declared over, and Palpatine crowned himself Emperor.

Fang Zar was declared an enemy of the Empire and arrested alongside sixty-two fellow delegates. Fortunately, former-senator Zar was able to be released on a technicality. He was strictly told to remain on Coruscant, now known as Imperial Center, but he fled to Alderaan regardless, seeking political asylum. Weeks after the end of the Clone Wars, fighting also ended on Sern Prime. Unwilling to risk Bail Organa's favor with the Empire further, he contacted Jula Shryne of the Drunken Dancer, a smuggling vessel, to contract passage off of Alderaan. During his attempt to flee the planet, Darth Vader and Commander Appo's 501st Stormtrooper Legion hunted the surly man down. Lord Vader's lightsaber was thrown through the air, nearly cutting Fang Zar in half as he scrambled up the boarding ramp onto the Drunken Dancer. He died soon after.

Garm Bel Iblis – Republic Senator of Corellia

Senator Garm Bel Iblis was considered one of the more famous Corellians of all time, and was the Senator representing the entire Corellian Sector during the time leading up to the Clone Wars. Bel Iblis was outspoken and brash as most Corellians were, and he frequently opposed Chancellor Palpatine's policies, well aware that the former Senator from Naboo was slowly consolidating power in the office of the Chancellor. With the Separatist Crisis looming large in the minds of all the Senate, it was no surprise to Bel Iblis when the Military Creation Act was proposed.

Senator Bel Iblis vocally opposed the act alongside Senators Bail Organa, Mon Mothma, Padmè Amidala, Fang Zhar and others, hoping instead that any armed conflict could be contained by local security forces. Unfortunately, after months of campaigning, it became clear in Garm's eyes that the Military Creation Act would be passed. After careful consultation with Diktat Shyla Merricope and Bel Iblis' chief aide Sena Leikvold

Inner Rim Senators

[Diplomacy +10] [Sense Motive +9]

There were many other Senators in the Old Republic that served in office during the Clone Wars, one of which is listed here.

Senator Bogg Tyrell: This female Aleena represented her homeworld of Aleen, though she spent much of her time partaking in what nightlife Coruscant had to offer, even dating Dug holovid star Seboca. She bumped into Jedi Obi-Wan Kenobi twice, once in her speeder while the Jedi was dangling from an assassin droid, and again in Dex's Diner as she was exiting, both times just days before the outbreak of the Clone Wars. ☺

Midanyl, Bel Iblis agreed to the only course of action left to Corellians.

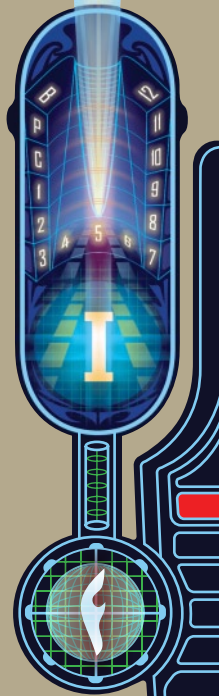

Desperate to avoid Corellian entanglement in a galaxy-spanning war, Bel Iblis invoked an obscure clause that allowed Corellia to shut down its borders and isolate itself with neutrality during the Clone Wars. Garm Bel Iblis feared that any army created would have been composed largely of his constituents, causing many Corellians to die defending planets far from home. He also hoped that with Corellia no longer available to draw experienced troops, pilots or funding from, the vote would flounder.

Of course, no one could have foreseen that a scant two months later, a battle-ready Clone Army would be made available to the Republic and emergency powers would be granted to the Chancellor to allow him to activate the army and begin a war. During the two months of isolation, Garm Bel Iblis spent much of his time visiting schools and making tours of various government installations and sector landmarks. Immediately after the Battle of Geonosis, Bel Iblis realized that he had misstepped, and took immediate steps to bring Corellia back into the Republic fold without losing face.

Garm's first offering to the Republic came when he discovered Tendir Blue had been contracted by the Techno Union to capture Ratri Tane, a defecting scientist, who had come to Corellia seeking asylum and safe transport to the Republic. Bel Iblis worked with Corellian Jedi Neeja Halcyon and CorSec's Rostek Horn to formulate a plan that would help soften Corellian attitude toward the Republic. When the plan was complete, Senator Bel Iblis had Neeja secretly contact Jedi Master Mace Windu, and put the plan in motion. The end result vilified the Confederacy on Corellia, brought the Corellian Jedi fully into the Jedi Order to participate in the Clone Wars, got Ratri Tane into safety, and sabotaged a prototype for a future battle droid generation produced by the Techno Union.

This action allowed Senator Bel Iblis to slowly bring Corellia back into the Republic, and by the twenty-second month of the Clone Wars, Corellia was back to trading with Sern Prime and producing Corellian Dreadnaughts and various transports for the Grand Army of the Republic, as well as distributing medical supplies and providing humanitarian aid. Unfortunately, Garm Bel Iblis was unable to convince his government to launch a military response to a distress call sent from Duro, which was taken over that same month.

With the Separatists operation known as Durge's Lance obviously stabbing its way toward Coruscant, Corellia was well aware that their system would be the next conquest on the road to the galactic capital. Garm pleaded with his close friend Senator Fang Zhar to speak on Corellia's behalf to send military aide to blunt the Confederate advance. Fortunately, Garm was again incorrect, as the CIS made clear their lack of desire to snatch up neutral worlds such as Corellia, and Garm Bel Iblis, outplayed, returned to the Republic with far less influence than he left with.

What little support Iblis had left to give, he gave fully to Senators Mon Mothma and Bail Organa, who were assembling what would become the Delegation of 2000; a list of 2000 senators opposed to the Chancellor's emergency powers as the Clone Wars neared their inevitable end. The petition was presented to the Chancellor shortly after the death of Count Dooku, the famous Separatist leader. Of course, not long after the presentation, the Jedi Order was wiped out and Palpatine declared himself Emperor.

During his short time as a member of the Imperial Senate, Bel Iblis put a friend named Irenez into the Imperial Academy, aware that military forces to oppose the Empire that were aware of their procedures would be valuable in the future. Garm remained an aak dog in nerf's clothing in the Senate, undermining Imperial policy as much as possible while seeming compliant. However, while spending over a decade in the Imperial Senate, Senator Bel Iblis was also building contacts and keeping in touch with Irenez. Eventually Mon Mothma convinced him to sign the Corellian Treaty, Garm's assets with Bail Organa and Mon Mothma's resources to undermine the Empire.

Shortly after the signing of the Corellian Treaty, Garm went to the planet of Anchoron to deliver a speech. Imperial assassins had planted a bomb, but Garm was lucky to be delayed by a rebel agent who informed him of the discovery of plans for the Death Star. Regardless, the Senator's family was killed in the blast. With nothing else to lose, Bel Iblis was put in charge of the Alliance Military. Garm Bel Iblis frequently clashed with Mon Mothma over ideology, and it was usually Bail Organa who pacified the pair and made it possible to achieve anything. So when Bail Organa was killed during the destruction of Alderaan, it was no surprise that Garm Bel Iblis and Mon Mothma had a falling out shortly afterward over an attack on the planet Milvayne.

Garm Bel Iblis took a sizable chunk of his military forces back and struck out against the Empire on his own. Irenez acted as his second in command, and soon Garm had a sizable armada led by six Corellian Dreadnaughts from the Katana Fleet. He established Peregrine's Nest as his mobile command base and conducted a hit-and-run campaign against the Empire for years, funded by Borsk Fey'lya and his clan. The group's greatest accomplishment was the utter destruction of an Ubiquitorate Headquarters on the planet Tangrene.

Even after the Rebellion killed the Emperor and defeated the second Death Star, Bel Iblis kept his forces hidden, helping to mop up Imperial Warlords and building his forces for the day when Mon Mothma showed her true colors and declared herself Empress. Fortunately, Garm Bel Iblis was wrong again, Mon Mothma proved a fair Chief of State, and twenty-seven years after the Clone Wars, Bel Iblis was reluctantly coaxed to join the New Republic by Han Solo, a fellow Corellian.

Garm was appointed to the rank of General and put in charge of Coruscant's defense during a siege by Grand Admiral Thrawn. Garm showed he had true military genius, and was given his own task force that allowed him to do much the same thing he had been doing from Peregrine's Nest for years. He was saddened when Mon Mothma died, but proud of the job Bail Organa's stepdaughter did as Chief of State in her place. It wasn't until Borsk Fey'lya's rise to power as Chief of State that Bel Iblis saw warning signs.

Garm Bel Iblis soon became fed up with corruption in the Senate, reminded of the time just before the Clone Wars. He feared that with the Yuuzhan Vong invasion, history could repeat itself all over again, plunging the galaxy into darkness for decades. Already seventy years old, Garm Bel Iblis helped to evacuate Coruscant during the Vong invasion, and then promptly broke away from the New Republic, commanding three fleets of his own against the Vong from Tallaan shipyards.

Luke Skywalker was able to eventually bring him back under the banner of the Galactic Federation of Free Alliances. Bel Iblis' ships along with the fleet of the Smuggler Alliance were able to turn the tide of the war, and eventually retake Coruscant. Garm Bel Iblis served as one of the occupation commanders on Coruscant, but his role during future conflicts is unknown.

Giddean Danu – Republic Senator of Kuat

Giddean Danu was considered among the most incorruptible and pragmatic of all the Senators in the Republic. However, it was not those traits that convinced Director Onara Kuat to appoint him as Senator Risi Lenoan's replacement on Coruscant. Onara felt that Gidean would be easily manipulated because of his idealism and lack of experience in large-scale politics. However, Senator Danu proved to be anything but controllable, and as a result Onara Kuat nearly had him removed from office twice.

Giddean Danu was in favor of an end to the Clone Wars, and a cessation to the Emergency Powers granted to Supreme Chancellor Palpatine. Unfortunately, his home-world of Kuat wanted anything but an end to hostilities. Kuat Drive Yards had benefited greatly from wartime contracts for their shipyards, and their subsidiary company on Rothana held exclusive contracts to much of the Republic's war material. Gidean Danu believed in serving the greater good instead of his home world's destructive interests, and he found himself allied with Senators Bail Organa, Mon Mothma, Garm Bel Iblis and Padmè Amidala.

Senator Danu was present at meetings in Bail Organa's office as well as Padmè Amidala's apartment to discuss both the Petition of two-thousand and the possibility of open rebellion against the Chancellor. Gidean Danu was a great friend to the Jedi Order, and firmly agreed with Padmè Amidala that no rebellion could succeed without the moral authority of the Jedi Order. Chi Eekway and Bail Organa managed to convince them to be patient, and wait to see what reaction the Chancellor would have to the show of solidarity represented by the Petition of two-thousand.

Unfortunately, by the time it was made clear that the support of the Jedi would be needed, Chancellor Palpatine had already declared himself Emperor, and destroyed the entirety of the Jedi Order. Gidean Danu was shocked at the horrors that corruption in the senate had allowed, but his voice was soon silenced after Onara Kuat made a deal with Tannon Praji, who set up what is believed to be Senator Danu's assassination.

Jannie Ha'Nook – Republic Senator of Glithnos

Jannie Ha'Nook was the senator representing the planet of Glithnos in the Galactic Senate during the Clone Wars. She was often seen as cold and overly-skeptical but became a valued member of Chancellor Palpatine's council during the war. In spite of her cynical outlook and independent nature, she was one of the first senators to vote in favor of the Emergency Powers Act. In the early days of the three year long conflict, she was placed as one of the senior members of the Security and Intelligence Council. Frequently she would meet with Supreme Chancellor Palpatine regarding matters of galactic security throughout the course of the war.

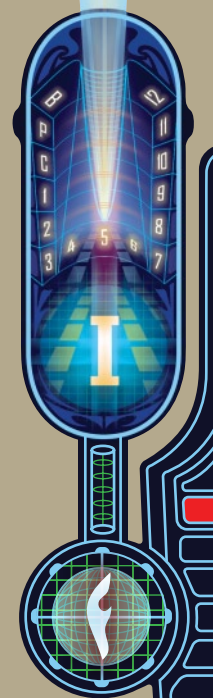

In the thirtieth month of the Clone Wars, Ha'Nook was called into a secret meeting by Supreme Chancellor Palpatine to discuss an extremely time-sensitive matter. A massive Separatist fleet had secured the planet Praesitlyn, dampening communications to the Outer Rim for the Republic. The Confederacy also posed a significant threat to the Seswenna sector from Praesitlyn which would easily allow them access to the Rimma Trade Route almost uncontested all the way into the Core Worlds. The Republic's Grand Army had been stretched too thin and the only forces that could be spared were a single legion of clone troopers that were stationed on one of Coruscant's moons at Centax One. Ha'Nook thought taking units away from capital security to devote to reclaiming Praesitlyn was unwise, but promised the Chancellor she would consider providing her support to sway other members of the Senate.

After their meeting, Jannie was contacted by a mysterious individual that she mistook for Armand Isard from the Senate Bureau of Intelligence. Very quickly she realized her mistake as the shadowy figure promised her plenipotentiary ambassadorship in the Sluis sector provided she pledge her full support to the devotion of troops to Praesitlyn. Ha'Nook was totally unaware that her anonymous caller was in fact Sly Moore attempting to bribe her into voting to support Palpatine. Jannie Ha'Nook agreed to the terms placed before her and rallied several senators to the Supreme Chancellor's cause.

Lexi Dio – Republic Senator of Uyter

Lexi Dio was the elected representative of the agri-world of Uyter, a planet in Mid-Rim. With the threat of the Confederacy looming over the Republic, Lexi Dio was among those ten senators appointed to the Loyalist Committee, formed six weeks before the Battle of Geonosis, to advise Chancellor Palpatine during the Separatist Crisis. Three weeks later, Senator Dio was able to push through a critical piece of legislation that aided her home world. The Abrion Sector seceded from the Republic, taking with it two-hundred agri-worlds. To stop the hemorrhaging of food from the Republic, Senator Dio's legislation suggested an emergency subsidy package that would benefit agri-worlds that stayed with the Republic, including Uyter. Her bill was a success, and the loss of food-producing worlds was limited largely to the Abrion Sector.

The next major object of contention came days before the Battle of Geonosis over the Military Creation Act. Lexi Dio sided with Padmè Amidala in opposing the Act, feeling it was alarmist and overkill, while many of the other members of the Loyalist Committee were strongly for it. The vote on the act was cancelled, however, when Jar-Jar Binks of Naboo voted the Chancellor Emergency Powers that allowed him to create a Grand Army of the Republic on his own. As a member of the Loyalist Committee, Lexi Dio spent much of her time in Chancellor Palpatine's office with her fellow committee members. She was in Palpatine's office when Obi-Wan Kenobi sent a message from Geonosis, watching the seemingly small events spin out of control toward war.

Lexi Dio remained a staunch supporter of the Republic, and spent much of the Clone Wars being a proponent of Sector Rights of Autonomy. To this end, she spent much time with Senator Padmè Amidala, who had similar views on strong central government, specifically the consolidation of power in the Office of the Chancellor. When Duros fell to the Separatists in twenty-first month of the Clone Wars, Lexi Dio was shocked to discover that two corrupt Senators on the Action Subcommittee were responsible. However, she spoke to the Holonet News alongside Senator Padmè Amidala, arguing that just because of this isolated incident, power should not be removed from Senate Action SubCommittees and put directly in the hands of the Office of the Chancellor. Shortly after her speech, Senator Lexi Dio was assassinated and replaced by Senator Male-Dee. The circumstances of her death remain a mystery.

Male-Dee – Republic Senator of Uyter

Appointed to the Galactic Senate by Uyter during the third year of the Clone Wars, Male-Dee was a replacement for the recently assassinated Lexi Dio. It was thought by the Uyter electorate that Male-Dee would be less outspoken than the late Senator Dio, and less likely to give reason to be assassinated. Male-Dee hailed from the Visdic Territories, a region on Uyter, and Senator Male-Dee could often be seen wearing traditional Visdic robes. He wore his hair in a bright red Mohawk, which was a sign of a plea for peace on his home world.

The soft-spoken uytterian soon found himself allied with Senator Padmè Amidala through his close friend, as he found he agreed with her on several of the same issues his predecessor did. It wasn't long before he introduced his close friend, Senator Nee Alavar, to Padmè Amidala, and they were two of the first people invited to sign the Petition of the two thousand, and were present in Chancellor Palpatine's office when Padmè Amidala and Bail Organa issued the petition. Palpatine was polite, but dismissive, and a few days later he named himself Emperor. It is unknown if Male-Dee was apprehended with the initial sixty-three members of the Delegation of Two-Thousand after the Clone War ended or if he remained as a Senator or went into hiding.

Mar Rugeyan – Head of Senate Public Affairs

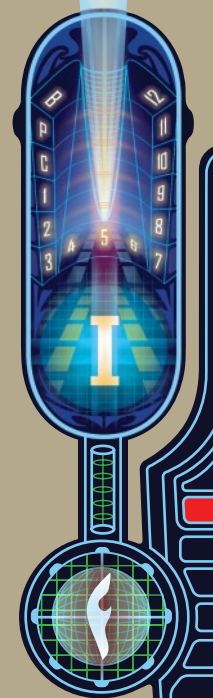

As head of the Senate Public Affairs Office, Mar Rugeyan was a man wholly concerned with image; specifically, media image. His primary task was to spin the news to portray the Senate and Republic government in the best light possible, and act as a liaison between the Senate and the media. Mar Rugeyan was outfitted with an office that would make many senators jealous. It was a large office on the 391st floor of the Public Affairs Office of the Support Services Center. From here, assisted by an attractive female named Jayl, Rugeyan exhausted his contacts in the defense and journalism industries to keep up image of the Senate throughout the Republic. He arranged several press conferences and interviews for senators with the public, as well as received advance copies of several holonet broadcasts, giving him time to perform damage control and issue statements when negative items made their way onto the nets. When the Clone Wars erupted across the galaxy, this position became critical to the morale of Republic citizens, and even helped influence many planets to remain within the Republic instead of willingly seceding to the Confederacy.

Four months into the Clone Wars, Mar Rugeyan gained access to the Senate landing platform, where six people had been taken hostage by four Haruun-Kal natives, including Mon Calamari Senator Meena Tills. There were several hover-cams and journalists present, though held back by a CSF line. However, that did not stop them from getting plenty of imagery when Twi'lek Jedi Master Kaim was killed and then thrown out into the passageway with explosives attached to him. Luckily, the hover-cams also saw a Republic Commando jump onto the explosive device heroically, absorbing the blast with his armor, which protected him. Rugeyan immediately got on his comlink to discuss strategy, and accidentally referred to the Commando as a grunt. Training Sergeant Kal Skirata took offense to the comment, and made it known rather violently by twisting Rugeyan's groin painfully before asking the Head of Senate Public Affairs to leave the scene, which he did.

Senators of the Expansion Region

[Diplomacy +10] [Sense Motive +9]

There were many other Senators in the Old Republic that served in office during the Clone Wars, some of which are listed here.

Senator Ister Paddie: After his predecessor committed suicide, Ister Paddie ascended to the role of Senator to his homeworld of Sermeria. Shortly afterward, he was put on Chancellor Palpatine's Loyalist Committee. He was very vocal when speaking out against Corellia's withdrawal from the Republic prior to the Clone Wars.

Senator Streamdrinker: This Tynnan represented his homeworld of Tynna during the Clone Wars, and was a member of the Delegation of 2000, speaking out against the consolidation of power by Chancellor Palpatine. When the Empire was formed, Streamdrinker was one of 63 Senators from the Delegation of 2000 to be arrested and was never heard from again. ⚡

Fortunately, the situation resolved itself in a satisfactory manner, when all four terrorists were killed by the Republic Commandos and all hostages safely extracted. Mar Rugeyan returned to the scene with several journalists and hover-cams, holding an impromptu press conference. CSF scene commander Jaller Obrim made negative comments about the results, but Mar Rugeyan rebuffed him, making it seem like a clear and perfect victory against terrorism by the Republic. Public confidence in the Senate and the Grand Army of the Republic soared as a result.

Eight months later, a terrorist network had Coruscant in the grip of fear, and Mar Rugeyan was suggested to Kal Skirata as a means to help his commandos achieve their mission with stealth. The very next day, the two had a meeting in Rugeyan's luxurious office. Sergeant Skirata met with Rugeyan in his office, and this time Skirata was much more accommodating of the Senate Head of Public Affairs. In exchange for making a valuable contact out of CSF head Jaller Obrim, Rugeyan would use his clout and call in favors from the Defense Department to arrange for extended leave for several clone troopers from two battalions of the 41st Elite on Coruscant, as well as the crew of the RAS Fearless. Within twenty-four hours, Rugeyan had thousands of clone troopers wandering Coruscant, allowing Skirata's Republic Commandos to move about the planet freely without attracting undue attention.

Ten days after their meeting, Rugeyan was forced to cover up for Skirata's men when they caused ten deaths in a very public manner in the under levels of Coruscant. Rugeyan was able to convince the media that the death and destruction was a result of an erupting gang war, and was able to keep the press satisfied with that answer. A week later, the Republic Commandos were successful, and the entire terrorist network on Coruscant had been violently shut down. Jaller Obrim's CSF got all the credit for the ninety-seven deaths and arrests, as well as the seizure of a large amount of explosives. Rugeyan was able to spin the news further to increase confidence in the Senate, and got a great soundbyte out of Senator Ihu Niopua about the excellent police work being done by the CSF.

It is unknown what happened to the well-dressed Rugeyan, but he was quite ruthless in his work. It is possible he continued on as a spin-doctor for the Galactic Empire, helping Imperial HoloVision cow the populace. Few in the galaxy would understand Emperor Palpatine's need for control of the media and know how to execute it as well as Mar Rugeyan.

Meena Tills – Republic Senator of Mon Calamari

Senator Meena Tills of Mon Calamari was known for her calm demeanor and great compassion. Her election to the position of Senator was unorthodox, as emergency elections were held after Senator Tikkes was revealed to be responsible for creating the Quarren Isolationist League. The war between the Mon Calamari Knights and the Q.I.L. raged on for months until Kit Fisto was able to blunt their main attack force and discover their field commander, a local organism previously unknown to have a powerful hive mind, the Moappa.

Five months into the Clone Wars, Meena Tills and Tundra Dowmeia led peace talks between the Quarren and Mon Calamari in order to establish a new, lasting peace between their two cultures, as well as the newly discovered Moappa. The peace talks were a great success, and resulted in a sharp increase in the popularity of both Meena Tills and Tundra Dowmeia. It was no surprise when the two were both elected to jointly represent the planet, one for each species.

Unfortunately, Senator Tikkes' presence was still felt on Mon Calamari, and both newly elected Senators' administrations were filled with spies and informants. One such spy was responsible for selling Senator Tills' travel schedule to the Separatists, who provided it to a group of Haruun Kal terrorists, desperate to hurt the Republic. Meena Tills was on his first trip to Coruscant after being sworn into office when he was kidnapped along with a member of the Corporate Sector Authority Direx Board and a few other passengers. Senator Tills watched as Jedi Master Kaim was sent in to negotiate, and was killed for his efforts. The senator was eventually rescued by Omega Squad, a team of Republic Commandos, averting two major political scandals, as the death of a CSA Direx Board member would undoubtedly bring the CSA into the conflict on the side of the CIS, and the death of Meena Tills would spark conflict on Mon Calamari again.

Senator Tills worked closely with Senator Dowmeia, and though the two had vastly differing opinions on issues local to Mon Calamari, they soon happily discovered their stances were similar on galactic-scale politics. Toward the last days of the Clone Wars, Meena Tills and Tundra Dowmeia both signed the Petition of the Two-Thousand, and Meena Tills made sure he was present when the document was presented to Chancel-

Mon Mothma – Republic Senator of Chandrilla

Mon Mothma was born on the planet Chandrilla twenty-six years before the Clone Wars. Her family was heavily involved in Republic politics – her mother was the Governor of Chandrilla and her father was an arbiter-general for the Republic. It came as no surprise to her family and friends when she began to pursue a life in politics. Five years before the Battle of Geonosis prompted the Clone Wars; Mon Mothma was elected to serve as representative to the entire Bornea sector in the Republic Senate, becoming the youngest senator to ever hold a seat in the galactic government at the age of just twenty-one years.

As tension enveloped the galaxy in the midst of the Separatist crisis, Mon Mothma proved herself amongst her colleges as a firm individual when it came to her beliefs. She sternly fought for the rights of all of the citizens of the Republic at a time when the government had proven to be riddled with corruption and shady agreements. Mon Mothma was among the first of the senators to realize the dwindling values of the Republic, and found like-minded beings in Bail Organa of Alderaan and Padmé Amidala of Naboo. In the Republic's time of turmoil, Mothma was appointed to the Loyalist Committee.

Due to events that transpired in the Senate during the Clone Wars consisting mainly of Chancellor's mounting political power, Mon Mothma grew skeptical of Palpatine and his motives. Mothma cooperated with a number of senators including Bail Organa and Padmé Amidala to put forth a series of legislations that could reign in Palpatine's ever-encompassing authority. At the initiative of the trio, a petition was drafted and signed by two-thousand members of the Senate. This document, dubbed the Petition of Two-thousand, called for Supreme Chancellor Palpatine to relinquish his emergency powers gained throughout the Clone Wars. The group had hoped this act would allow diplomacy to resume and potentially bring an end to the war. Unfortunately Palpatine had amassed too much uncontested power and refused to acknowledge the document, providing only his reassurance that he would uphold his word when the crisis was finally over.

With Palpatine's refusal to agree to the terms of the Delegation of Two-thousand's petition, Mon Mothma and Bail Organa began organizing secret meetings to discuss the formation of an organization to promote the restoration of the Republic to its former glory. While several senators such as Bana Breemu and Fang Zhar took part in these clandestine assemblies, none of them were under any illusions that what they spoke of could be construed as treason. Senator Amidala advised extreme caution, urging Mothma and Organa to publicly support Palpatine but to continue their plans. This would prove as keen advice when Palpatine addressed the Senate citing the Jedi had betrayed the Republic and as such was restructuring the Republic into a Galactic Empire.

With their worst fears now a reality, many members of the Delegation of Two-thousand now found themselves under the scrutiny of the Imperial Security Bureau. Mon Mothma pleaded with Bail Organa and the others to publicly dispute Palpatine's actions, but instantly reconsidered one month after the Clone Wars had ended when the Emperor ordered the enslavement of both Kashyyyk and Mon Calamari. Instead Mothma began organizing rebel cells that would independently oppose the Emperor's reign. Over the next fourteen years she would continue gaining sympathy all throughout the galaxy.

At this time, Mon Mothma negotiated an alliance between the rebel factions commanded by Bail Organa and Corellian Senator Garm Bel Iblis in the Corellian Treaty. This document proclaimed the formerly individual organizations to assume operating under the banner of the Alliance to Restore the Republic. Mon Mothma was appointed as the Chief of State of the Alliance performed her duties with great diligence, all the while continuing her participation in the Imperial Senate on behalf of Bornea. During this period, Mothma took Bail Organa's adopted daughter Leia under her wing, coaching her on matters of politics and swaying her to the Alliance's cause.

Eventually Leia succeeded her father and became the new senator for Alderaan in the Imperial Senate, breaking Mothma's record of the youngest senator ever to be appointed in the government when she was only eighteen years old. Leia continued to work with Mon Mothma by supporting the Rebel Alliance in whatever ways necessary. Unfortunately Mon Mothma's healthy relationship with Leia was not universal with all members of the Alliance council. Founding members Garm Bel Iblis questioned the upper workings of the Alliance, stating Mothma's amount of control over the military group mirrored that of Palpatine's. Mothma instated a policy that at any time a simple majority vote by the Alliance council could see her ejected from her position, but this amendment was never enacted in her entire career. Bel Iblis was still unsatisfied and broke away from the Rebel Alliance.

Two years later, Mothma signed into action the official Declaration of Rebellion and the conflict between the Alliance and the Empire began spilling out into the media. This conflict came to a head three years later when Palpatine dissolved the Imperial Senate, cementing his total control over the galaxy. At that time, Mon Mothma had already dedicated herself full-time towards the anti-Imperial efforts of the Alliance. Even her daughter Lieda and son Jobin actively supported the Rebel cause. Her efforts were then doubled when the destruction of Alderaan and the death of millions, including Bail Organa occurred at the hands of Grand Moff Tarkin and the largest war machine ever created by the Empire: the Death Star. A Rebel group under the leadership of General Jan Dodonna launched an assault on this battle station and succeeded in destroying the war platform. This upped the stakes and the Emperor declared all-out war against the Rebel Alliance.

The war waged on for four years and saw the death of thousands, including both of Mon Mothma's children. The Rebel Chief-of-state was unshaken in her resolve, however, and personally gave a briefing at what would become the Alliance's most important mission. Information had been stolen by Bothan spies on the creation and whereabouts of a new Death Star even more powerful than the first. To compound the importance of this mission, the Emperor himself was personally overseeing the final stages of the behemoth construction. Rebel soldiers under the command of Admiral Ackbar and General Madine flung forth a heavy offensive. Even though the entire scenario was a trap perpetrated by the Emperor, the Rebels were successful in their goal: the Death Star was destroyed and with it Emperor Palpatine.

Mon Mothma worked hard to turn the militant Rebel Alliance into a fully functioning government. Her efforts would pay off in the form of the New Republic. Mothma served as Chief of State to this governing body for seven years. At that point she fell ill from a sickness brought about by a pro-Imperial ambassador from Carida named Furgan. In her absence she appointed Leia Organa Solo as the acting Chief of State. Even though she eventually recovered from her illness thanks to the Mon Calamarian Jedi Chirgah, she refused to reclaim her seat in the New Republic. Instead she guided the councilors of the New Republic to elect Leia Organa Solo as the new Chief of State. Mothma then retired to her estate on Coruscant, providing Leia with advice as she requested it. The mother of the Rebel Alliance as well as the New Republic lived out a peaceful life for the next eighteen years before dying of natural causes in her sleep on Coruscant.

Neel Alavar – Republic Senator of the Kanz Sector

Neel Alavar was the elected representative of the Kanz Sector, which included her home world of Lorrd. As Lorradians are famous for their mastery of reading body language, it was thought that sending a Lorradian as their senate representative would give their sector an advantage in negotiations over others. Neel Alavar did find that much of the senate was filled with corrupt liars, beings she wished to have no association with.

Looking for honest politicians, she came across Senator Male-Dee from Uyter, and the two became fast friends during the last year of the Clone Wars.

After many conversations between the two about the erosion of civil liberties and usurping of power by the Chancellor, Male-Dee introduced her to Senator Padmé Amidala, Bail Organa and Mon Mothma. The group was planning to petition the Chancellor, and Nee Alavar found herself signing the Petition of the Two Thousand. She was present alongside Male-Dee when the petition was presented to the Supreme Chancellor, but, days after a polite dismissal, he declared himself Emperor. It is unknown if she was one of the initial sixty-three Senators arrested, or if she swore fealty to the Emperor and continued to serve in the Galactic Senate.

Onaconda Farr – Republic Senator of Rodia

Senator Onaconda Farr could be considered representative of the corruption that had taken root deeply in the Senate. He was known to line his own pockets and take maximum advantage of every perk afforded him as a senator. However, he was fiercely loyal to the Republic. Eleven years prior to the Clone Wars, he was summoned along with several other senators about taking action against the Yinchorri, who had begun a campaign of conquest. Senator Farr supported Valorum's blockade and embargo, pending an owed favor. Shortly afterward, just after the disaster that was the Eriadu Trade Summit, met with Senators Orn Free Taa, Tikkes, and Mot Not Rab to discuss how best to take advantage of the recently politically weakened Valorum, hoping to maintain the corrupt status-quo.

More than a decade later, Onaconda Farr was still the Rodian representative to the Senate, and his son had even visited the core to vote on the Military Creation Act in a mock-up voting held on Chandrilla by a legislative youth program. Senator Farr was proud to see his son create a narrow victory for what he considered to be an act vital to the survival of the Republic during the Separatist crisis. Onaconda Farr was considered one of the loudest proponents for instituting the Military Creation Act immediately. He spent much of his time as a verbal opponent to Chancellor Palpatine, who wanted to continue to try to negotiate with Count Dooku first. Farr felt it folly to negotiate when "your house is on fire."

A week after those inflammatory statements, the Loyalist Committee was created by Chancellor Palpatine to help advise him during the Separatist Crisis. Senator Farr accused Palpatine of partisanship, putting only his close political allies in the committee in hopes of watering down the Military Creation Act, or avoiding having to vote on the Act at all. A week later he spoke out against the Chancellor again when he put Armand Isard in charge of completely restructuring Republic Intelligence. Farr claimed Palpatine would use the branch to increase his personal power.

Three weeks after the formation of the Loyalist Committee, Onaconda Farr came into possession of a list of 245 Senators and Judicial Officers that had deep Separatist ties, one of which was Senator Havriso Looruya, a member of the Loyalist Committee. Senator Farr took the floor and would not relinquish it, despite Mas Amedda's call for order, until he was granted an audience with the newly revamped Senate Bureau of Intelligence. Farr made as much noise as possible, claiming the SBI was merely a tool of the Loyalist Committee, but was eventually granted audience.

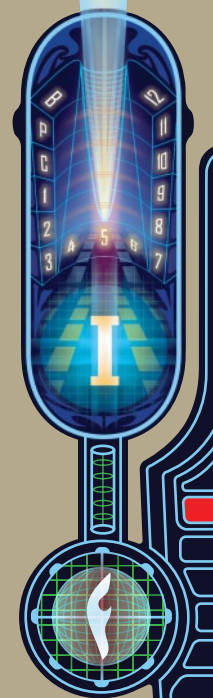

A month after the formation of the Loyalist Committee, SBI validated Senator Farr's claims against Havriso Looruya, as well as twelve other senators. Further, Senator Farr was asked by Chancellor Palpatine to fill the now vacant spot on the Loyalist Committee. Senator Farr's excitement over the news was tainted, however, having received news of the death of his brother and his wife in a house fire back on Rodia. Despite his personal loss, his career continued to shine. He was talked about often on the Coruscant talk show Amberdawn, where he was held up as an example of the epitome of a Loyalist.

His name was a common site in the Holonet News, and his pro-Military Creation Act stance was well known and regarded all over Coruscant. It was also well known that he was interested in chairing or at least sitting on a committee to help steer the military. He was so pro-Military Creation Act, in fact, that he financed a Holo-Drama called The Trickery of Vosdia Nooma which, in a very heavy-handed way, showed the dangers of voting against the Military Creation Act. Farr went so far as to perform the part of an oracle in the play on opening night via hologram.

Less than a month later, the Loyalist Committee was called into Supreme Chancellor Palpatine's office to view a message recorded by Obi-Wan Kenobi, who informed them of the Separatist plot on Geonosis before he was captured by destroyer droids. Hours later, Representative Jar-Jar Binks of Naboo motioned for the Chancellor to gain Emergency Powers, and the Grand Army of the Republic was created out the Clone Army prepared on Kamino. Onaconda Farr applauded the turn of events, eager to strengthen the weakening Republic. Senator Farr was quickly placed in charge of Corellian Trade Spine Defense, in charge of allocating resources and military oversight.

Twenty months into the Clone Wars, Asajj Ventress of the Confederacy posted a number of bounties on various members of the Jedi Order and Senate. Senator Farr had a bounty posted for twenty-five thousand credits. The bounty forced Senator Farr to remain safely on Coruscant, as returning home to Rodia would expose him to far too many bounty hunters.

A month later, Senator Farr realized that his home-world's involvement in the fighting on Ando was posing a threat to his planet from the entire Confederacy. Convinced his home world was in great danger, he re-routed three newly hulled Venator-Class Star Destroyers from Duro to the Ando-Rodia battlefield, and bribed Senator Ronet Coor several million credits as well as exclusive rebuilding contracts for his home world of Iseno on the war-torn planet of Ando for additional ships to be moved to Rodia from Iseno. Two weeks later, the Separatist Operation known as Durge's Lance pushed up the entire Corellian Trade Spine and decimated Duros defenses, taking the planet in short order.

Twenty-two months into the Clone Wars, Senator Onaconda Farr resigned from the Senate Action Subcommittee for Corellian Trade Spine Defense, and was put under investigation by SBI Agent Ingleman Berez. The investigation took a month, but they found accurately that three Venator-Class Star Destroyers were re-routed from Duros defense by Onaconda Farr himself, and Duros reinforcements from Iseno were bribed to be relocated. Both Senator Onaconda Farr and Ronet Coor were removed from office, and a groundswell movement began in the senate suggesting that the military be controlled directly by the Chancellor instead of by Senate Action Subcommittees. This, of course, was counter to everything Onaconda Farr believed in, and he made it possible. It is unknown what the former Rodian Senator did for the remainder of the Clone Wars or afterward.

Orn Free Taa – Republic Senator of Ryloth

Senator Orn Free Taa was an incredibly obese Rutian Twi'lek that represented the world of Ryloth in the Galactic Senate. Senator Taa was one of the more recognizable faces in the Senate because of his immense girth, uncharacteristic for most Twi'leks. His indulgence had ballooned his body along with his personal taste for graft, bribes and corruption to the point of limited mobility, and Senator Taa's hoverchair was a common sight around the Senate Hall. More than a decade before the Clone Wars, Senator Taa shared the responsibility of Senator with Senator Chom Frey Kaa, another similarly obese Twi'lek. After Senator Kaa was removed from office after a scandal involving kidnapped Jedi, he was replaced with Connus Trell, who likewise proved too overt in his corruption and was killed by Jango Fett.

Mere months before the Battle of Naboo, Orn Free Taa had risen to the position of leader of the Rim Faction, which was opposed by Bail Antilles of Corellia, who represented the Core Faction. Orn Free Taa also sat on both the Senate Appropriations Committee and the Senate Allocations Committee. As a former Tax Collector on Ryloth, his creative bookkeeping skills served him well on both political bodies. He had a circle of consorts, Mid Rim Region Senators Sidebar: There were many other Senators in the Old Republic that served in office during the Clone Wars, some of which are listed here.

Senator Darsana: This Anselmi Senator from Glee Anselm was a supporter of the Loyalist Committee, and a sympathizer with the plight of the Wookiees and their dealings with the neighboring Trandoshans.

Senator Garlan Limoth: A human senator to the entire Trans-Nebular Sector, and was a supporter of Palpatine until he declared himself Emperor. The Senator was almost immediately assassinated while riding in his speeder.

Senator Gorothin Vagger: An Aqualish Senator who represented not only his homeworld of Andosha II, but the entire Andoan Free Colonies. When Ando seceded from the Republic, Senator Vagger kept the Andoan Free Colonies a part of the Republic.

Senator Gume Saam: This Ishi Tib represented his homeworld of Tibrin during the Clone Wars.

Senator Jollin Resbin: This Sneevell Senator represented his homeworld of Sneevell and the rest of the Kastolar Sector. He was a supporter of the Military Creation Act, going as far as hiring Sneevell Podracer Boles Roor to help him campaign in favor of the Act.

Senator Lavina Durada-Vashne Wren: Senator of the Cularin Sector, Senator Wren found herself accused of collusion with the Separatists. She was placed in jail awaiting trial and the Cularin Sector was placed under Republic martial law. The Senator later escaped, and her fate is unknown.

Senator Mousul: This Senator represented Ansion and the Ansion Sector, and was loyal to Commerce Guild President Shu Mai. His plot to cede Ansion to the Separatists failed due to the intervention of Jedi Knights Obi-Wan Kenobi and Luminara Unduli, as well as their Padawans, keeping the Ansion Sector and Senator Mousul in the Republic. His loyalty, however, remained with Shu Mai and the Separatists.

Senator Polo Se'lab: Se'lab was a Bothan Junior Senator representing Bothan Space during the Clone Wars, and found himself often disagreeing with Palpatine's policies alongside close friend Barrister Sayer Mon Neela. The two would eventually join the Rebel Alliance.

Senator R'shinnos Sh'neel: This M'shinn native of Genassa represented the M'Shinni Sector and respected the subtlety of Chancellor Palpatine's political prowess, commenting such during Palpatine's bid for negotiation to Count Dooku just prior to the official outbreak of the Clone Wars.

Senator Silvu Donte: This Advosze represented his homeworld of Riflor, and was a member of the Zorzsin family, noted for their ties to organized crime and the criminal underworld.

Senator Tendau Bendon: An Ithorian Senator representing the Ottega Sector, Tendau Bendon was a vocal opponent of the Military Creation Act, and a member of the Delegation of 2000. He was one of 63 Senators of the Delegation of 2000 that were arrested after Palpatine's ascension to Emperor.

Senator Yarua: A Wookiee representative of Kashyyyk for over one-hundred years, Yarua had many troubles with the Republic during Palpatine's tenure as Chancellor, nearly ceding from the Republic on more than one occasion. He was a great friend of the Jedi, and shortly after Palpatine was declared Emperor, Yarua and his delegation were placed under arrest and never heard from again.

Senator Yudrish Sedran: Senator Sedran represented Chalacta and was a practitioner of the Chalactan faith, and friend of the Chalactan Jedi Sar Labooda and Depa Billaba, who persuaded her to oppose the Military Creation Act.

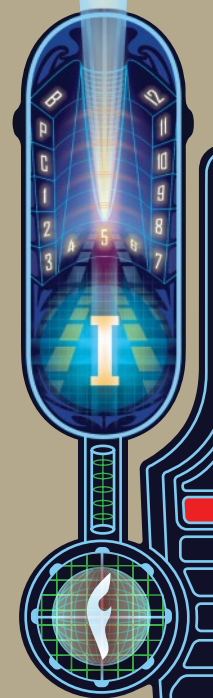

Senator Zurros: A corrupt Falleen Senator representing his homeworld of Falleen, Zurros attempted to play the Confederacy against the Republic while maintaining his official Republic Senator status. After nearly being assassinated by Quinlan Vos at Dooku's order, Zurros became a spy and puppet of the Separatists. ⚡ most often rare Lethan Twi'lek females trained as dancers, as well as a green-skinned Twi'lek named Pampy as a personal aide. He was a staunch militarist, and was opposed to Chancellor Valorum's rule, as it limited the boundaries of his greed. Taa was a very vocal member of the senate, opposing Valorum at every opportunity.

Six months before the Battle of Naboo, the Galactic Senate was focused on a major bill that would tax goods in the Outer Rim to limit the growth of the Trade Federation. Orn Free Taa was at a Coruscant Opera House taking in a Bith rendition of "The Brief Reign of Future Wraiths" along with fellow Senators Toonbuck Toora, Passel Argente and Edcel Bar Gane as well as Senator Palpatine and his two aides, Kinman Doriana and Sate Pestage. The box was personally bowed to by Chancellor Valorum before the beginning of the opera. Senator Taa's box discussed the meaning behind the personal nod from the Chancellor, listening to Palpatine's explanation closely. The tax bill was delayed until after a Trade Summit to be held on Eriadu.

After a failed assassination attempt on Valorum, Orn Free Taa stopped by to visit the fallen chancellor in the hospital, seeking support for legislation. Taa hoped to convince the Chancellor to cease blocking his attempts to reduce tariffs on the exportation of Ryll spice from his native Ryloth. While at the hospital, however, Palpatine's aide Sate Pestage planted information that would implicate Chancellor Valorum in being in league with the trade federation to invest stolen credits in Valorum Shipping and Trade, a shipping company on Eriadu owned by the chancellor's relatives. When he discovered the information, Senator Taa brought it first to Palpatine, wondering how best to use it. At Palpatine's suggestion, Taa gave the information to Bail Antilles, who was the chair of the Internal Investigations Committee. The resulting scandal weakened Valorum's chancellorship considerably, much to the delight of Senator Taa, who threw a lavish party after the proposed taxation of Outer Rim planets bill was voted to go through.

Over the next several months, Orn Free Taa continued to influence galactic events. With the chancellor weakened, Taa suggested Mas Amedda as Vice-chair, well aware that the Chagrian was a slave to procedure and bureaucracy. This further tied the Chancellor's hands, making him largely ineffective. The taxation of outlier trade routes resulted in a blockade of protest by the Trade Federation, and events spiraled to culminate in a vote of no confidence being taken on Chancellor Valorum. In the blink of an eye Valorum lost his chancellorship, and Orn Free Taa nominated Senator Palpatine of Naboo, believing him to be of a similar mind and controllable. Little did Senator Taa realize the events had all been manipulated by Palpatine himself.

Eleven months before the Clone Wars, the Separatists declared themselves as a movement under the leadership of Count Dooku. This threw the entire senate into disarray, as new party lines were drawn up between the militarists and pacifists. Orn Free Taa remained powerful, though he was no longer a party leader. His attitude remained the same, however, and he spared no opportunity to needle his political opponents in the newsnets. He also took on a new advisor in fellow Rutian Twi'lek Supi.

Two months before the Clone Wars, when Corellia decided to turn to isolation instead of combat, Senator Taa joined with Senator Ister Paddie to bash Corellia. Taa carefully pointed out how much isolation is like secession, and reminded everyone how Corellian Senator Garm Bel Iblis had recently spoken out about the illegality of secession, both senators felt the move selfish, as many worlds with far fewer war resources were standing by the Republic.

A week later, Taa applauded Chancellor Palpatine's holonet-wide offer to negotiate with Count Dooku to avoid war. However, Taa expressed grave concern that none of the Senators were first consulted on the content of the message and method of delivery. Because Count Dooku did not respond to the offer for peace, and because of Taa's statements, Palpatine created the new Loyalist Committee a week later. The Loyalist Committee was made up of ten Senators, including Orn Free Taa, which would advise Palpatine on how to deal with the Separatist Crisis.

A week after the formation of the Loyalist Committee, Senator Taa spat venom as his fellow corrupt senators. Four senators, including close friend Senator Tikkes, were accused of having ties to slavery and removed from office pending a trial. Taa told the holonet news that he was horrified, and that the four senators should have a taste of slavery themselves as punishment. A week later Senator Tikkes escaped to join the Separatist Movement. Taa was desperate for necks to hang as a result, wondering how a Senator could have bypassed all the security holding him. His disgust with some of his fellow Senators was even more apparent when a scandal was brought to light revealing two senators had been gambling on which planets would be next to secede from the Republic. However, Taa did support Senator Simon Greysshade's failed attempt to generate tax revenue by taxing casino's such as the many he owned on Vorzyd V. Taa felt it was a voluntary tax for the stupid, and was dismayed that the bill failed to pass. Taa spent the following two weeks keeping his name in the holonets by making inflammatory statements and appearing on newsnets shows such as Amberdawn.

Days before the Battle of Geonosis, Orn Free Taa was devoted to getting the Military Creation Act passed, so that the Republic would have an army with which to defend itself with. The same day as the vote, there was an assassination attempt on Padmè Amidala, Senator of Naboo. She was believed dead just as the vote was about to be made, causing many who were against the act to be swayed toward its creation. However, her sudden appearance moments before the vote swung things rapidly the other way. Senator Taa quickly motioned for the vote to be deferred to slow the momentum against the act.

Voting on the Military Creation Act ultimately proved unnecessary when a report from Jedi Obi-Wan Kenobi revealed that the Separatists had created a gigantic droid army on Geonosis. The Chancellor was given emergency powers and immediately formed a Grand Army of the Republic. The Clone Wars had begun.

A year and two months later, the issue of defending the contested planet Jabiim was brought before the Senate. As the world was rich in ore, both sides of the conflict wanted to control the otherwise useless planet. Orn Free Taa was outspoken on the need to control Jabiim by supporting a sizable minority that was loyalist. By this time in the war, Taa's most outspoken political rival had become fellow Loyalist committee member Bail Organa of Alderaan.

Orn Free Taa spent much of the next six months on Coruscant serving on the Loyalist Committee, advising Palpatine. He noted that while Palpatine normally argued in favor of Bail Organa, his actions usually ultimately reflected Orn Free Taa's wishes. After the battle on Jabiim ended, Orn Free Taa was present to listen to Jedi Knight Anakin Skywalker's report on the events. After most senate sessions the elite of the Senate would congregate in a reception hall and discuss politics in a less formal setting. Orn Free Taa took to making many deals at such meetings, including one with the Senator from Chad, representing the Chadra-Fan.

However, a year and seven months after the clone wars began, much of Orn Free Taa's carefree lifestyle changed. CIS Commander Asajj Ventress placed a bounty for a paltry sixteen-thousand credits on his head, dead or alive. Senator Taa was well aware that several successful assassination attempts against Republic Senators had been made on Coruscant since the Separatist crisis, including those on Senator Aks Moe, Former-Chancellor Valorum, and Senator Viento. Taa feared both Coruscant and his home world of Ryloth, and took to riding in his hoversled, which he had equipped with a shield generator, exclusively when out of his home.

Two months after the posting of the bounty, Senator Taa lashed out against Corellia once again. Senator Fang Zar was trying to rally support for defending isolationist Corellia, hoping it could serve as a bulwark against a Separatist incursion after the fall of Duro. Taa felt that Corellia deserved to be overrun, since they did nothing to help the Republic when the Separatist Crisis began. Taa maintained an angry and paranoid demeanor through much of the remainder of the Clone Wars.

Six months before the end of the clone wars, in the wake of what was thought to be Master Yoda's death, Orn Free Taa suggested the formation of a security and counter-intelligence force to be controlled directly by the office of the Chancellor. While Yoda reports of Yoda's death were later revealed to be incorrect, the act still passed. The security force would eventually become the Internal Security Bureau (ISB) during the time of the Galactic Empire. Ryloth was overrun by the Separatists during the Clone Wars and used as a droid reclamation plant, something Orn Free Taa protested heavily until, eventually, Ryloth was liberated during the Outer Rim Sieges. Fortunately, little harm was done to the planet. While Orn Free Taa's fate is unknown, it is possible that he was arrested by the Empire on charges of corruption, and replaced with a senator more loyal to the Galactic Empire. Ryloth itself remained Imperial aligned officially, while secretly aiding the Alliance to Restore the Republic.

Padmé Amidala – Republic Senator of Naboo

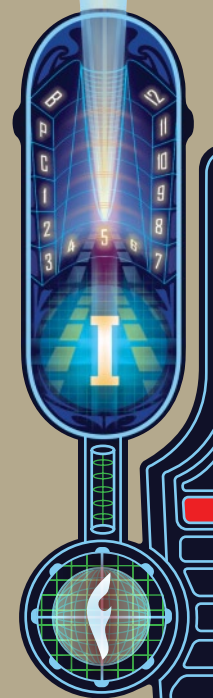

This native of the planet of Naboo was born Padmé Naberrie, the youngest daughter of Ruwee and Jubal Naberrie, twenty-four years before the Clone Wars began. As a child, Padmé lived with her family in the mountain lake country of Varykino near Theed with her older sister Sola. Padmé spent much of her early life volunteering for the Refugee Relief Movement like her father. However, Padmé admired the lifestyle of her grandmother Winama, and also became a member of Naboo's Legislative Youth Program. When she was eight years old, Padmé was accepted into the Apprentice Legislature. During her time there, she met Thesme senator Silya Shessaun who became her mentor. Within just three short years, Padmé became a full-fledged Youth Legislator.

By the age of twelve, Padmé had been appointed as Princess of Theed. A year later, King Veruna renounced his throne, and Padmé was persuaded by those around her to run in the impending election. Because her platform opposed many of the former King's unfavorable standpoints on key issues, and her natural popularity, she was elected Queen of Naboo at age fourteen. Upon her appointment she took on the stately name, Amidala, and was the youngest Queen ever elected in Naboo's history. As Amidala, she trained in martial combat with her new Chief of Security, Captain Panaka. She also agreed to take on several handmaidens to act as decoys, and sometimes allow her handmaiden Sabé pose as Queen while Amidala took on the personae of the handmaiden Padmé to help insure the Queen's safety. As her first official act as queen, she amended the Naboo constitution to allow monarchy to only serve a maximum of two terms.

Not long after becoming Queen, Naboo came under blockade by the Trade Federation. Despite her formidable talents with diplomacy and negotiation, the Neimoidians that monopolized the Trade Federation were in cahoots with the Dark Lord of the Sith, Darth Sidious, who had no intentions of allowing such debate to take place. Naboo had little in the way of natural resources or industry, so it depended heavily on imports.

PADMÉ AMIDALA

Amidala worked feverishly with Naboo's senator, Palpatine, to reach a satisfactory resolution to the matter. Supreme Chancellor Valorum even secretly dispatched two Jedi as delegates to settle the dispute quickly and quietly. The Viceroy of the Trade Federation attempted to have the delegates killed and acting under the orders of Sidious, invaded Naboo – effectively ending all possibilities for a diplomatic end to the situation.

The Queen and her advisors were taken captive by Viceroy Nute Gunray and his army of droids. They were about to be imprisoned in a detention facility with the rest of the planet's inhabitants when the two Jedi delegates, Qui-Gon Jinn and Obi-Wan Kenobi, came to their rescue. With the Jedi's help, Amidala was able to escape the planet with Captain Panaka, the Royal Handmaidens, and a small crew in the Queen's sleek N-1 Nubian transport. The ship was damaged during the escape, however, and the group was forced to make a lay way on the desert planet of Tatooine.

While the Jedi worked to acquire replacement parts for the Queen's ship, Amidala came across a young boy named Anakin Skywalker who was enslaved to one of the junk dealers. She became very close to this young one. After assisting the Queen and her companions in obtaining the components needed to repair the Queen's vessel, Anakin was awarded his freedom thanks to the dealings of Qui-Gon Jinn with his slave master, Watto. Anakin accompanied the group to Coruscant, capital of the Republic, to plead Naboo's case to the Senate. During their journey, Anakin and Padmé shared a moment where they connected and Anakin gave her a necklace carved from a Japor snippet.

Queen Amidala joined with Senator Palpatine to address the Senate on Naboo's invasion by the Trade Federation. Supreme Chancellor Valorum was sympathetic to Amidala's plight, but was politically outmaneuvered by the delegates of the Trade Federation. Senator Lott Dod of the Trade Federation demanded a team of representatives be sent to Naboo to verify the Queen's claims, delaying the liberation of the Queen's people. Acting on Palpatine's advice, Queen Amidala called for a vote of no confidence in Valorum's leadership of the Senate. When the motion was seconded, Valorum had no choice but to resign from his position. Proceedings were then set in motion to elect a new Supreme Chancellor, but Amidala had grown impatient.

The Queen gathered her comrades and the Jedi Qui-Gon Jinn and Obi-Wan Kenobi and set a course back to Naboo to forcibly free the citizens of her world. With the help of the Gungan Jar Jar Binks, Amidala formed an alliance with the native Gungans and launched an assault on Theed. An army of Gungans led by Jar Jar Binks and Captain Tarpals faced off with the droid forces of the Trade Federation. The battle served as a diversion while the Queen and her security forces stormed the Royal Palace. Queen Amidala and the Jedi were successful in capturing the Viceroy and his aide Rune Haako while Naboo starfighter pilots and Anakin Skywalker destroyed the droid control ship in orbit. The Naboo crisis had come to an end, and the Trade Federation leaders were sent back to Coruscant in chains, seemingly sure to pay for their crimes.

Having successfully liberated the Naboo and cementing an alliance between the Naboo and Gungan race, Amidala gained immense favor with her people. When the completion of her second term as Queen approached, the Naboo tried to have the constitution amended so Amidala could hold a third term, but she refused and relinquished her throne to her successor, Queen Jamilla. One of Jamilla's first acts as Queen was the appointment of Padmé Amidala as Senator of Naboo. Padmé graciously accepted the honor and went on to serve Naboo and the rest of the Chommell sector from the Galactic Senate.

Two years before the Clone Wars when Amidala became a member of the Senate, Count Dooku of Serenno began a secessionist movement and many star systems began breaking away from the Republic. Many senators feared outright conflict and proposed the Military Creation Act, allowing the Republic to assemble and maintain a standing army as a precaution to war with the newly formed Confederacy of Independent Systems. Amidala was one of the most vocal oppositions to this proposition and formed the Campaign Against Republic Militarization to combat the Military Creation Act and its supporters. She was then appointed to the Loyalist Committee, a group of select senators that acted in an advisory capacity directly for the Supreme Chancellor.

For two years, Amidala fought to oppose the Military Creation Act, and during that time, two attempts had been made on her life. It was believed that disgruntled spice miners from one of the moons of Naboo were to blame, but Amidala was convinced that Count Dooku was behind the assassination attempts. She believed that Count Dooku wanted the struggle to lead to all out war. To quell the pleas from the Chancellor, Amidala accepted additional security from the Jedi Order. As the Force would have it, Jedi Knight Obi-Wan Kenobi and his Padawan Anakin Skywalker were assigned to fulfill the task.

On their first night watch, Obi-Wan and Anakin foiled a third assassination attempt on Padmé while she slept. This caused the Chancellor to strongly urge Amidala to go into hiding until the crisis was abated. Amidala blatantly refused because she wished to be present when the fate of the Military Creation Act was decided. However, it took the words from Padawan Anakin Skywalker to ease her mind.

Skywalker escorted Amidala back to her home planet of Naboo where she stayed with her family in the lake country. It was then that Amidala began noticing her strong feelings for Anakin, which her sister Sola realized immediately. Anakin was deeply in love with Amidala, and confessed his feelings to Padmé. Being a senator, a relationship could draw unwanted attention to Padmé and Anakin's adopted Jedi heritage forbade relationships of an intimate nature. They contemplated beginning an intimate relationship and keeping it a secret, but Padmé thought it would be too difficult for both of them.

Not long through their stay, Anakin began having horrid nightmares about his mother, so Amidala agreed to accompany him back to Tatooine. Upon their arrival, the pair tracked down Shmi Skywalker's last known whereabouts to a small homestead near Mos Eisley where Shmi had married a man named Cliegg Lars. Anakin and Padmé learned from the Lars family that Shmi had been captured by Tusken Raiders one morning while she was picking mushrooms from the moisture vaporators. Padmé stayed at the Lars home while Anakin set out to find his mother.

Skywalker returned to the Lars homestead absolutely devastated. His mother had perished from wounds sustained from the Sand People. Amidala attended Shmi's modest funeral and consoled Anakin over his loss. However, Anakin and Padmé didn't have long to grieve when Amidala's droid R2-D2 received a distress call from Obi-Wan Kenobi on Geonosis. Kenobi had uncovered the Separatists preparing machines of war to launch against the Republic, but was captured. Amidala and Anakin left Tatooine and headed to Geonosis to come to Kenobi's aid.

Anakin and Padmé arrived on Geonosis but their presence was quickly detected and they were captured. They joined Obi-Wan Kenobi in the Geonosian execution arena after being sentenced to death by Count Dooku. Padmé's strong will and modest military training served her well and allowed her to survive long enough for a contingent of over two-hundred Jedi to arrive to rescue the trio. Padmé armed herself and participated in the conflict, but the droid forces of the Separatists overwhelmed the Jedi and the survivors were cornered.

Just then, an entire army of clones led by Jedi Master Yoda swooped in to save the day. An all out battle ensued between the droid armies of the Confederacy and the newly discovered Clone armies of the Republic. During the struggle Padmé was knocked from one of the Republic gunships and separated from Obi-Wan and Anakin. She hurried back to the bulk of the Republic forces to gather reinforcements to help the Jedi pursue the escaping Count Dooku. By the time she caught up with them, however, Obi-Wan, Anakin, and Yoda had already confronted Count Dooku and the Serannoan noble managed to escape, not before severing Anakin's arm. The resulting battle at Geonosis sparked a three-year long conflict that would come to be known as the Clone Wars.

After surviving the brush with death on Geonosis, Anakin and Padmé were married in secret on Naboo, with the couples' droids C-3PO and R2-D2 as witnesses to the nuptial. The union proved extremely difficult for both of them, however, as Anakin was thrust off to battle. Anakin began to sink farther and farther towards the Dark Side from the bitterness of his separation from Padmé. Padmé worried for her husband's safety during the war and for his sanity as she witnessed his slow descent to the Dark Side.

Throughout the Clone Wars, Padmé continued her message of peace, but it fell on deaf ears as most were in outrage over the Confederacy and all but begged for conflict. In the fourth month of the Clone Wars, Padmé had her own share of the action while doing a favor for Master Yoda by ferrying him back to Coruscant. During their journey Yoda felt that Jedi were in danger. Padmé agreed to escort Yoda to the planet of Ilum to provide assistance. When they arrived Yoda carried on to the Jedi Temple present on the planet while Padmé and the droids stayed behind with the ship. In Yoda's absence, Padmé was attacked by Confederate chameleon droids. Using her ingenuity, and Threepio as a diversion she managed to defeat the droids even though she was completely unable to see them.

At the start of the second year of the Clone Wars, Padmé accompanied Senator Bail Organa and his personal assistant Sheltay Retrac to a luxurious gala on Coruscant hosted by Senator Bezz Drex. Organa was convinced that Drex had been receiving bribes from the Confederacy and urged Amidala to keep an eye out for any suspicious activities that he could use as proof of Drex's treachery. Padmé had also suspected misdoings on Drex's part and had smuggled a small holo-recorder into the event on C-3PO. Padmé and Sheltay slipped away from the party when Drex was called away on a private matter. The two stealthily made their way to Drex's private tower where Padmé witnessed a transaction between Bezz Drex and the uncle of Passel Argente - the Koorivar Magistrate of the Corporate Alliance. Amidala was able to capture the bribe on her holo-recorder but was spotted while trying to make her exit. She was forced to square off with one of Drex's brutes, but with the help of Sheltay she was able to escape with the evidence intact. Padmé and Sheltay delivered this evidence to Bail Organa and Drex was brought before the Senate on charges of treason.

In the twenty-ninth month of the Clone Wars, Padmé had an opportunity to reunite with her husband for a mission to the planet Genian. A slicer by the name of Talesan Fry had created a device that was capable of cracking Confederacy encryption schemes and Amidala was opted to speak with Fry to negotiate obtaining the device for the Republic. She succeeded in convincing Fry to hand over the device, but the group was attacked by the Bounty Hunter Magus. Talesan traveled with Amidala and the Jedi back to the world of Azure where more conflict had begun. Magus followed the group to Azure and attempted to steal the device for the Separatists. Amidala accompanied Jedi Siri Tachi to apprehend Magus after he launched an attack on Republic forces with his Corporate Alliance-supplied droids. Siri Tachi leapt from their starfighter and confronted Magus, but was ultimately killed in the struggle. Padmé piloted the ship to safety while the Jedi succeeded in winning the battle on Azure.

For three years Padmé sought to put an end to all of the bloodshed of the Clone Wars, barely seeing her husband for more than a few hours at a time over the course of months. But the fighting drew closer and Coruscant was besieged by the Confederacy. Chancellor Palpatine was captured, and Padmé accompanied by Mon Mothma and Bail Organa were forced to evade several Confederate Tri-fighters on their way to the shelter with the other senators in deep under-city bunkers. This attack had a silver lining, however, as it brought her husband Anakin home. His homecoming gave her the opportunity to tell Anakin that she was pregnant with his child.

The war had taken its toll on both Anakin and Padmé. Amidala had joined with a group of senators calling themselves the Delegation of Two-Thousand, and pleaded with Palpatine to put an end to the war and let diplomacy resume. In this faction of the Senate, rumblings of Rebellion began to surface, but Padmé distanced herself from the individuals while saying nothing to Palpatine about the matter or doing anything to quell the treasonous talk. Padmé had other matters on her mind. During Anakin's stay on Coruscant, Padmé began to see just how far towards the Dark Side Anakin had slipped.

Days after the attack on Coruscant, General Grievous was tracked down and eliminated, all but ending the Clone Wars. Unfortunately when that happened, the Jedi Temple went up in flames. Padmé feared for Anakin's safety, but the situation was far worse than she had realized. Anakin had apprenticed himself to Chancellor Palpatine – secretly the Dark Lord of the Sith – and under Sidious' orders, stormed the Jedi Temple with a legion of clone troopers and slaughtered its residents. Anakin came to Padmé and told her that he was being sent on a mission to neutralize the Separatist Council and put an end to the Clone Wars once and for all.

Shortly after Anakin's departure, Padmé was approached by her old friend Obi-Wan Kenobi. She confided in Obi-Wan that Anakin was the father of her unborn child, and he informed her that Anakin had fallen to the Dark Side. Although she knew in her heart that his words were true, she refused to betray Anakin's trust and would not tell Obi-Wan of Anakin's whereabouts. Instead Padmé ran to Anakin to see for herself what her husband had become, and to plead with him to turn away from the Dark Side before it was too late.

When she arrived on Mustafar she discovered the man she loved was no more, Anakin's fall from the light was too severe. Obi-Wan Kenobi had stowed away onboard her ship, and Anakin thought Padmé had betrayed him. In a fit of rage, he used the Force to choke the life from his beloved wife, but Kenobi goaded him to direct Anakin's anger onto himself to spare Amidala. She fell to the ground unconscious.

By the time Padmé regained consciousness; she had been taken to the Polis Massan medical center. Padmé's vital signs were dropping rapidly and the doctors discovered that Padmé was carrying twins. They were forced to induce labor to insure the survival of the infants. Padmé gave birth to a boy whom she named Luke, and a girl whom she named Leia. She urged Obi-Wan to care for her children and insisted that Anakin could still be saved from the Dark Side before the last breaths of life slipped from her lips.

The birth of the twins was kept a secret by the Polis Massans, Obi-Wan, Yoda and Bail Organa. Obi-Wan spirited Luke away to his family on Tatooine while Organa adopted Leia as his own child on Alderaan. Padmé's body was transported back to her home planet of Naboo and was prepared in a manner as to appear that the infants died with her. Amidala was honored in a massive funeral procession led by her family, her colleges, and Queen Apailana. She was laid to rest clasping the necklace given to her by her husband in her hands.

C-3PO – Protocol Droid

C-3PO began his true existence in humble surroundings. He was pieced together from various junk parts by nine year old Anakin Skywalker on Tatooine some thirteen years before the Clone Wars began. The majority of his AA-1 Verbobrain was originally manufactured 90 years prior to the Clone Wars from an assembly line on the planet of Affa. The circumstances involving the dismantling of the original model is a mystery, however, Anakin still managed to fashion a fully functional droid brain from three separate ones that had various damage. The droid was very proper and also possessed a finicky and often worrisome personality. 3PO no doubt inherited these traits uncommon to a droid by the means from which his brain was cobbled together.

3PO was assembled by the boy to assist his mother in her daily duties for their slave owner Watto. Much to his embarrassment, although fully functional, 3PO lacked cover plating. He came to this realization the day he was introduced to Padmé Naberrie and her astromech droid R2-D2 when he was first fully activated. 3PO fought back his humiliation and assisted Padmé's feisty little astro droid with putting the finishing touches on Anakin's podrace. Anakin had volunteered his piloting skills for the Boonta Eve race the following day to assist the Jedi Master Qui-Gon Jinn who was stranded on the planet with his charge Queen Amidala.

Flying his master's banner at Boonta Eve in Mos Espa, 3PO watched on as Anakin beat the odds and won the race. Unbeknownst to all but Watto and the Jedi Master, by winning the race Anakin had inadvertently won his own freedom. 3PO was forced to part company with his maker as young Anakin traveled to Coruscant to train as a Jedi Knight. The droid stayed behind on Tatooine to carry out his original function by assisting Shmi Skywalker in her activities.

For nearly ten years C-3PO was companion to Anakin's mother. When Watto sold Shmi to a moisture farmer near Anchorhead, the protocol droid accompanied her. The moisture

Outer Rim Region Senators

[Bluff +14] [Sense Motive +4]

Outer Rim Region Senators Sidebar: There were many other Senators in the Old Republic that served in office during the Clone Wars, some of which are listed here.

Senator Fema Baab: This female senator of the Bajic Sector was a loyal supporter of Palpatine, and was one of the senators to greet him on the landing platform after being rescued from General Grievous by Anakin Skywalker. She was believed to be a spy for Palpatine by Mon Mothma and Bail Organa.

Senator Han Olbeg: Senatorial representative of Pitann and the Kathol Sector, Senator Olbeg was best known for speaking out against gladiatorial games, and the senators that supported the illegal sport.

Senator Ivor Drake: This woman represented Kestos Minor and the Kwymar Sector during the Clone Wars, and was a member of the Delegation of 2000. She was one of 63 Senators to be arrested from the Delegation of 2000 after Palpatine became Emperor, and was never heard from again.

Senator Rasit Brun: This senator of the world Rintoone and the Lambda Sector was a vocal opponent of the Trade Federation and their Senator Lott Dodd in the days leading up to the Clone Wars.

Senator Rennimdius B'thog Indriumsegh: This Elomin Senator of Elom was also the leader of the Elomin Council on Elom. During his tenure as Senator, the Elom were granted near-equal rights to the Elomin, much to the Senator's chagrin. He had a relative who was later a Declaration of the New Republic signatory.

Senator Shea Sadashassa: Senator to the planet Herdessa, situated between Hutt Space and the Corporate Sector, Senator Sadashassa was a member of the Delegation of 2000. Like many members of the Delegation of 2000, she was arrested shortly after Palpatine was declared Emperor along with 62 other Senators. She was never heard from again.

Senator Simon Greyscale: Senator Greyscale rose to his station in the Republic representing Vorzyd V and the Commonality after his cousin was assassinated. He was a corrupt young show-off, and one of his many hot-rod speeders was "borrowed" by Anakin Skywalker to rescue Obi-Wan Kenobi during a deadly chase on Coruscant. He resigned after Palpatine declared himself Emperor, and took over as administrator on The Wheel, a space station that doubled as a gambling resort, where he eventually died after running afoul of Luke Skywalker, Princess Leia Organa and Han Solo.

Senator Sweitt Concorkill: This Vurk Senator of the planet Sembla was a member of the Delegation of 2000, and attended a rendition of Squid Lake at the Galaxies Opera House during the same showing as Chancellor Palpatine and Anakin Skywalker.

Senator Veedaaz Awmetth: Senator Awmetth was formerly of the Sarrish Defense Forces, but eventually was elected Senator of his native homeworld of Sarrish and the Vensensor Sector. He was one of many former colleagues that attended Senator Padmé Amidala's funeral on Naboo.

Senator Zo Howler: This Anx Senator represented Gravlex Med and the Raioballo Sector after Senator Horox Ryyder retired. Senator Howler held many of the same political leanings that Ryyder did, and was felt a worthy successor by Horox Ryyder. He was usually accompanied by aide Fo Kuna. ∴:

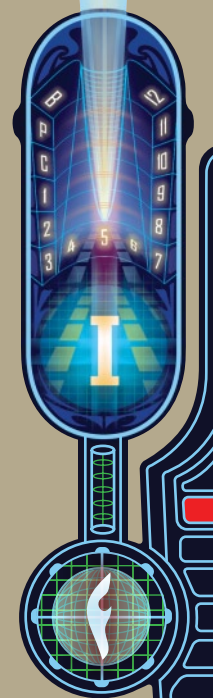

farmer, a human named Cliegg Lars, freed Shmi from slavery and married her. Shmi used her new freedom to protect her son's invention from the coarse sands of Tatooine. She used money to finally complete the droid by purchasing and installing his long-missing cover plating. Although the plating was worn and mismatched, it gave 3PO a sense of pride in at last being completed.

Threepio worked on the moisture farm for his masters up until the days before the Battle of Geonosis gave way to the Clone Wars. The droid's maker, Anakin Skywalker, finally returned to his home planet seeking out his mother. Unfortunately, Shmi had been abducted by Tusken raiders nearly a month earlier when she ventured out one morning to collect mushrooms off of the vaporators. 3PO was deeply saddened when Anakin returned with the lifeless body of Shmi in tow. After a brief funeral ceremony, 3PO's visitors received a distress call and Anakin reclaimed Threepio. The protocol droid accompanied Anakin, Padmé and R2-D2 to Geonosis to rescue Obi-Wan Kenobi from the clutches of the wicked Count Dooku.

From this point on, C-3PO and R2-D2 were nigh inseparable. When Anakin and Padmé made their way into the Geonosian catacombs, the droids were left behind to guard the ship.

However, Threepio bellyached all the way when Artoo was too concerned with Padmé's welfare and followed. Upon entering the droid foundries of Geonosis, one false step landed Threepio face down on the droid assembly lines. As he attempted to make his escape, his head was knocked off and ejected into a bin containing the heads of battle droids. In a comical turn of events, Threepio's head was fastened to a battle droid chassis and his body was adorned with the head of a battle droid. Both halves of C-3PO then marched into the Geonosian arena propelled by the battle droid counterparts to confront the Jedi Knights who had rushed to Kenobi's aid. During the conflict, Threepio's head was knocked free from the battle droid frame and the battle droid controlling his body was destroyed. The pieces of 3PO were quickly gathered up by Artoo Deetoo and reunited as the battle around them spilled out of the arena and into the desert plains of Geonosis.

After the fighting subsided on Geonosis, the Clone Wars were under way. Threepio accompanied his master Anakin on his mission to escort Senator Padmé Amidala back to her home planet of Naboo. During his stay on Naboo, Threepio and Artoo bore witness to the secret marriage of Anakin and Padmé. After their return to Coruscant, Threepio stayed with Padmè while Anakin went off to war.

While Anakin was away taking part in the Clone Wars, Threepio fell under the care of Amidala. Threepio was charged with various diplomatic tasks by the senator. One such assignment saw him assisting the Naboo Royal Council serving as a liaison to the Jedi during the Ohma-D'un crisis during the third month of the war. Though many of his duties kept him anchored on Coruscant or Naboo, the droid saw his fair share of travel and adventure.

In the fourth month of the Clone Wars Artoo and Threepio accompanied Senator Amidala in escorting Jedi Master Yoda back to Coruscant. While en route, the tiny green Jedi sensed his comrades in danger on the planet Ilum. The band traveled to the icy planet to rescue Jedi Master Luminara Unduli and her apprentice Barriss Offee. Confederacy chameleon droids had succeeded in collapsing the Jedi Temple there, burying the two Jedi under tons of rubble. While Yoda pressed onto the temple, Threepio stayed behind at the ship with Amidala and Artoo. As they waited, the ship came under attack by more chameleon droids. Much to his dismay, Amidala used Threepio as a decoy to lure the chameleon droids out of hiding so she could dispatch the stealthy attackers.

In the final months of the Clone Wars, Padmè gave R2-D2 to Anakin as a present, and Anakin in turn gifted Threepio to her. Threepio was secretly tasked with watching out for Padmè's well being. 3PO continued to carry out his normal duties for Padmè in the Senate and occasionally with the Naboo Royal Council. Amidala felt that Threepio's appearance needed improvement if he was to serve as a protocol droid in the Senate. The Naboo senator had his rusted gray coverings replaced with brand new shiny gold ones. Either by chance or intention, however, the right shin plate was replaced by a contrasting silver covering; all but signifying Threepio's modest beginning.

As the Clone Wars came to a close, Threepio became privy to a great deal of Amidala and Skywalker's secrets. He was aware of the senator's pregnancy and that his maker, Anakin Skywalker, was likely the father. He had been present at several of the Loyalist Committee gatherings as well as the clandestine meetings with senators such as Bail Organa and Mon Mothma at the Alderaanian senator's Cantham House. Threepio even learned of Anakin's fall to the Dark Side shortly after the Jedi Temple was assaulted by the 501st clone trooper legion, though he refused to believe it. Unfortunately he would witness his maker's fall from grace first hand in the days following.

Threepio accompanied Padmè to the volcanic industrial world of Mustafar to confront Anakin about what he had done at the Jedi Temple and to attempt to convince him to reconsider the path he had chosen. When they arrived it became apparent that Anakin was too far gone to be redeemed. Unbeknownst to Amidala and Threepio, Jedi Master Obi-Wan Kenobi had stowed aboard their craft in an effort to locate Anakin. The protocol droid watched in horror as Anakin lashed out through the Force and attempted to choke the life out of Amidala for what he believed was her betrayal.

As Anakin and Obi-Wan crossed lightsabers, Artoo and Threepio carried the unconscious Padmè onboard her ship so that she could receive medical attention. After a short while, Obi-Wan returned to the transport carrying Anakin's lightsaber. Threepio feared the worst, but unquestionably piloted Amidala's ship into space. The group made their way to the Polis Massan asteroid field and rushed Padmè to the medical center. Threepio waited with Artoo, Bail Organa, Obi-Wan and Yoda as the senator gave birth to twins. He looked on in sadness as his master slipped away into death after naming her offspring: Leia and Luke.

Threepio and Artoo then came into the ownership of Alderaanian Senator Bail Organa. However, Threepio knew too much about all the things that had transpired such as the secret meetings, the birth of the twins and Anakin's fall to the Dark Side. Organa put the droids under the care of Raymus Antilles, brother-in-law and captain of Bail's courier, the Tantive IV. Bail ordered that Threepio memory banks be wiped clean. During his memory wipe, Threepio was programmed with specific subroutines that prohibited him from revealing any information about his past before the memory wipe to prevent any possibility of any erased information being recovered. Antilles then put Threepio to work programming binary load lifters in the Tantive IV's cargo bay.

A year later Threepio and Artoo both were still serving onboard the Tantive IV, but Threepio also participated in such duties as assisting the Royal House of Organa on Alderaan. However, one day during an escape pod training drill onboard the Tantive IV the ship was attacked by pirates the Antilles was forced to flee the scene, leaving the escape pods behind. Unfortunately, See-Threepio and Artoo-Deetoo were passengers on one of the escape pods and were accidentally abandoned by their master. Bail Organa placed top priority on their recovery, but Threepio as his companion were thrust into a series of adventures and traded hands amongst dozens of owners over the next eighteen years.

Approximately one year before the Battle of Yavin took place Threepio and his counterpart were reclaimed by the Royal House of Organa on Alderaan, and the two droids were returned to their post onboard the Tantive IV. Threepio also began secretly working in a diplomatic capacity for the Rebel Alliance, negotiating coalitions and treaties with various alien worlds. This would go on until the Tantive IV was attacked by Darth Vader's Star Destroyer Devastator orbiting Tatooine. Threepio accompanied Artoo into an escape pod once more and the pair fled to the desert planet below.

Shortly thereafter, Threepio and Artoo were scooped up by a Sandcrawler of Jawas. In due time Threepio was sold to a moisture farmer named Owen Lars, and after a small amount of convincing, succeeded in persuading Owen to purchase R2-D2 as well. Threepio and his little companion were placed in the care of Owen's nephew, Luke Skywalker. While young Luke was cleaning and preparing the two droids for their duties, he stumbled upon a recorded message from Princess Leia Organa of Alderaan. The message contained pleas for assistance from a former Jedi named Obi-Wan Kenobi. Luke surmised that an old hermit named Ben Kenobi who lived out beyond the Dune Sea might be familiar with this Obi-Wan character. However, when Threepio and Luke awoke the next morning Artoo Deetoo was missing.

Threepio and Luke set out to locate the feisty little astro droid and after much searching, Artoo was discovered in a canyon several kilometers from the Lars Homestead. While Threepio and Luke attempted to load the astromech into their speeder to return home, they were attacked by Tusken Raiders. During the attack, Threepio lost his footing and slipped down the canyon wall. Fortunately Ben Kenobi came to the group's rescue. When C-3PO was recovered by Luke and Kenobi, he was moderately damaged – his arm having broken off from its joint. The party gathered up the worrisome protocol droid and made haste to Kenobi's dwelling before more Sand People arrived.

While in Ben Kenobi's hut, Artoo revealed the message to Kenobi from Princess Leia. Threepio's secret programming was forced into play and the droid shut down when the subject of Anakin Skywalker arose between Ben and Luke. After Threepio reactivated, the group headed towards Anchorhead to bring Kenobi, who was actually Obi-Wan, to the nearest star port. While en route they discovered a battered Sandcrawler and Luke recognized it as the same Jawas that sold Threepio and Artoo to his uncle. Luke left Threepio and Artoo with Kenobi and sped home to check on his aunt and uncle. When he returned Luke revealed to the party that his entire home had been destroyed by the Empire. With no ties keeping him on Tatooine, Luke decided to accompany Kenobi to Alderaan.

Threepio accompanied the group to Mos Eisley where they encountered a smuggler named Han Solo and his Wookiee co-pilot Chewbacca. After a brief run-in with a local platoon of stormtroopers, the fellowship blasted their way out of the Mos Eisley space port in Han's ship, the Millennium Falcon, and made their way to Alderaan. While en route, Threepio passed the time by watching Artoo and Chewbacca play holo-chess. Threepio advised Artoo to change his tactics with the comment, "Let the Wookiee win". The mood was more serious when they finally arrived at their destination. Alderaan had been completely obliterated. No sooner had they made this discovery, the group was pulled into a moon-sized space station via tractor beam. To avoid capture, Threepio and the others hid inside smuggling compartments that Solo had installed into the deck of his ship. They all snuck onboard the Death Star and headed into the docking bay's control room. Threepio and Artoo analyzed the floor plans of the immense battle station and located the power station for the tractor beam. During their search, the droids also discovered that Princess Leia was onboard and scheduled to be executed.

Threepio and Artoo were left behind in the control room while the rest of the team set out to deactivate the tractor beam and save the princess. While they waited, stormtroopers forced their way into the control room. Threepio managed to convince the shock troops that he was a member of the station's droid compliment and that he and Artoo were forcibly locked in a storage closet by the infiltrators. He then smooth talked his way out of the control room by persuading a stormtrooper that Artoo was in need of maintenance.

The two droids then made their way to a storage room off of the hangar where the Millennium Falcon was docked and attempted to contact his master. Luke, Han, Leia and Chewie had managed to escape an onslaught of stormtroopers by diving into a trash compactor. Only now, the garbage masher had activated and their lives were once again in danger. Threepio instructed Artoo to shut down the trash compactor and unseal the hatch so his master and his companions could escape. Soon afterward the group managed to successfully escape the battle station thanks to Obi-Wan sacrificing himself in a duel with Darth Vader.

Threepio and his comrades hastily made their way to Yavin IV to deliver technical read-outs of the Death Star to the Rebel Alliance that Artoo had been carrying in his memory banks. Unfortunately the Empire had placed a tracking device on Han's ship and the massive Death Star hot on their tails. The rebels launched a seemingly doomed offensive on the planet killer. Threepio waited helplessly in the control center of the Rebel base as his master took part in the battle. In a startling turn of events, Luke Skywalker delivered a fatal blow on the Empire and destroyed the entire battle station.

Threepio continued to serve the core membership of the Rebel Alliance on a number of diplomatic missions for a number of years. After Rebels evacuated Yavin IV, the group erected a new base on the ice world of Hoth and Threepio followed. Darth Vader led a task force specifically formed to root out and destroy the Rebellion, however, and three years after the Battle of Yavin the rebel base was once again discovered. Threepio accompanied Princess Leia, Han Solo and Chewbacca in the Millennium Falcon as they made their escape.

During their journey the Empire pursued them through an asteroid field. Threepio endured much anxiety from Solo's prowess at piloting a starship. Unfortunately, Han's ship was already in poor shape and they were forced to seek refuge in a gigantic cave to conduct repairs. Han ordered Threepio to plug into the Falcon's computer system to determine the source of the myriad of problems. When Han and the others ventured outside to chase off mynocks, they made a startling discovery. Without a word the group rushed back inside and took flight to escape the cave as quickly as possible. Only after their escape did Threepio and the others realize they had been in the belly of an enormous space slug. Threepio and the others then had to limp to the planet Beshpin where Lando Calrissian, friend of Han Solo, ran a mining operation at a location known as Cloud City.

No sooner had they arrived at the magnificent floating city, Threepio encountered stormtroopers waiting for the group and he was blasted to pieces. When the others realized he was missing, Chewbacca discovered the mangled droid in a junk pile and attempted to reassemble him. Before the Wookiee could finish the repairs, the Empire seized the party and interrogated them.

The Dark Lord of the Sith, Darth Vader, experimented on Solo by placing him in carbonite. Threepio, toted on Chewbacca's back in a sack of parts, instantly realized that provided Solo survived the process that he would be quite well protected. Solo was then carted off by the bounty hunter Boba Fett to be delivered to Jabba the Hutt.

With the help of Lando Calrissian, Threepio and the others managed to escape Cloud City as well as rescue Luke Skywalker who had come to their rescue. As they fled to the safety of deep space, Artoo worked to reassemble Threepio properly. Threepio and the others then began preparations to rescue Han Solo from Jabba. The protocol droid and his allies traveled to several worlds including Coruscant where Threepio and Artoo were forced to pilot the Millennium Falcon in an attempt to rescue Princess Leia from the clutches of the Black Sun crime lord Xizor when she approached the Falleen for information on Han's whereabouts.

A year after the Battle at Hoth, Threepio and Artoo were sent to the palace of Jabba the Hutt on Tatooine as a part of the rescue mission. Threepio was stunned to realize that his master Luke had gifted C-3PO and R2-D2 to the vile gangster and the two were forced to serve the slug-like Hutt. Threepio acted as a translator to Jabba since the crime lord had destroyed his previous one and the position had since been vacant. He mediated the visitation of several guests including Princess Leia posing as the bounty hunter Boush and Luke Skywalker. After the young Luke managed to survive Jabba's rancor, he sentenced them all to death and carried them out into the desert to feed them to the Sarlaac in the Pit of Carcoon. During the execution, Luke managed to escape and retrieved his lightsaber from Artoo Deetoo and battled with Jabba's henchmen to free his friends. In the struggle Threepio tumbled off of the deck of Jabba's Sail barge and landed head first in the sand. When Skywalker succeeded in liberating his comrades, Threepio and Artoo were gathered up and the group darted away to safety.

Threepio and the others rendezvoused with the Rebel Alliance near Sullust. The Rebels planned to attack the Empire's construction yard for the second Death Star. Threepio and Artoo accompanied Han Solo, Leia Organa, Luke Skywalker, Chewbacca, and a team of Rebel commandos to the Sanctuary Moon of Endor. Their mission was to disable the shield generator protecting the battle station in orbit. While en route to the shield generator the team was intercepted by the natives to the planet, the short and fuzzy Ewoks. The tribal Ewoks mistook Threepio as one of their deities and worshipped him. After some clever manipulation on Luke's part, Threepio convinced their captors to release the Rebels. The Ewoks then agreed to assist Threepio's master and his comrades in their mission.

The entire mission was a trap set by the Emperor, however, and an entire legion of stormtroopers ambushed the Rebels on the forest moon's surface. Threepio and Artoo staged a diversion to throw the Empire's troops off guard and the Ewoks launched a surprise attack. With the help of the Ewok tribe, the Rebel Alliance was able to defeat the Emperor's army and gain access to the shield generator. When the shield bunker was destroyed, it allowed the Rebel fleet in orbit to complete their task by entering the Death Star's superstructure and destroying the main reactor. This set off a major chain reaction that destroyed the entire battle station, effectively toppling the Empire and restoring peace throughout the galaxy.

Threepio continued to assist the Rebel Alliance as it slowly grew into the New Republic and became the dominant governing body in the galaxy. He was involved in an uncountable number of adventures. Five years after the Empire crumbled; Threepio became the assistant caregiver to the Solo twins and a year later to Anakin Solo. All in all he served the Skywalker family in one form or another for decades.

Jar Jar Binks – Naboo Representative

Jar Jar Binks was born to George Binks, a powerful military commander in the Gungan Grand Army. Unfortunately, Jar Jar was something of a disappointment, and his antics may have contributed to putting both of his parents into an early grave. He grew up on the streets of Otoh Gunga, surviving by joining a gang led by another Gungan named Tarpals. Eventually, Tarpals joined the Gungan Grand Army himself, and petitioned for a position in the government for Jar Jar tending to a zoo. Naturally, Jar Jar's clumsiness contributed to the escape of many of the animals, and after he managed to cause Boss Nass' Heyblibber to crash, the Gungan Grand Council had finally had enough. Jar Jar was banished from Otoh Gunga.

Jar Jar spent the next several years wandering Naboo's forest and swampy areas, foraging for food. Ten years before the Clone Wars would engulf the galaxy, Jar Jar happened across Jedi Master Qui Gon Jinn, who saved him from being trampled by a Trade Federation MTT Transport. In return, Jar Jar risked execution to show the Jedi the way to Otoh Gunga. Fortunately, the grateful Jedi used a mind trick to ensure the troublesome Gungan's freedom.

Jar Jar's association with the Jedi eventually led him off of Naboo and, by accident, to Tatooine. There Jar Jar met future Jedi Anakin Skywalker, who saved him after Jar Jar upset a bowl of food being eaten by podracer Sebulba. In order to help leave Tatooine and get to Coruscant to garner support against the invasion of Naboo, Jar Jar helped Anakin fix his podracer and watched him race it to victory. On Coruscant, Queen Amidala made clear the danger both the humans and the Gungans faced, and Jar Jar let her know about the powerful army the Gungans maintained.

Jar Jar's comments sparked an idea in the young queen's mind, and she returned with Jar Jar and the Jedi to Naboo. There, Jar Jar's presence helped broker an alliance between the Gungans and the Naboo. Together, they executed a daring plan to rid Naboo of the Trade Federation invasion army. Eager to do his part, Jar Jar was made a General in the Gungan Grand Army, alongside General Ceel. Jar Jar proved extremely unskilled at command but lucky in personal combat, and was responsible for the destruction of several battle droids and quite a few battle tanks as well.

Luckily, Jar Jar found himself able to extricate himself from a combat posting, and instead became Former Queen and now Senator Padmè Amidala's partner in the Galactic Senate. Officially, he was a junior representative, and was on Coruscant to represent the views of the Gungans to Senator Amidala and provide political council. In reality, Jar Jar merely served as a friend and confidante for Padmè, someone with whom she could be herself and forget about the scrutiny she was under as a Senator.

Jar Jar remained a clumsy oaf even during his time in the senate. He attended many fundraisers and galas, but quickly developed the reputation that had made him so unwelcome in Otoh Gunga. Four and a half months before the Battle of Geonosis, during the Endangered Shreebird Aviary grand opening on Coruscant, Jar Jar accidentally deactivated the sky dome, causing the birds to fly out of the exhibit. Two months later, he accidentally destroyed an ice statue crafted by famous sculptor Kime Enanrum. Two weeks before the Clone Wars, a level five alert was issued by the Senate Guard when Jar Jar Binks was discovered to be missing at a gala fundraiser for the Refugee Relief Movement on Alsakan. He was later found to have locked himself inside a foyer cloakroom by mistake.

A little over a week later, when the fate of the Military Creation Act was to be decided by vote in the Senate, Padmè Amidala was the subject of assassination attempts. In the wake of the attacks, she was put under Jedi protection and sent off of Coruscant, leaving Representative Binks in charge. When it was later revealed that Padmè was captured, along with Anakin Skywalker and Obi-Wan Kenobi, it was easy for Palpatine to manipulate the simple-minded Gungan into motioning to give the Chancellor emergency powers to bypass voting on the Military Creation Act and instead decide himself. Of course, Palpatine formed the Grand Army of the Republic, and sent it to Geonosis, where the Clone Wars began.

Jar Jar spent the rest of the Clone Wars silent at Padmè's command, and when she died three years later, was made Senator. He remained a quiet member of the Senate, and eventually retired. Shortly after retirement, he married and had children. His son, Abso Bar Binks, saw the Galactic Empire for what it was, and joined the Rebellion against the Empire.

Ronet Coorr – Republic Senator of Iseno

Ronet Coorr was a vocal Bimm who represented the militant Inner Rim world of Iseno in the Galactic Senate. His small stature belied his great political skill, and he was close friends with Senator Onaconda Farr of Rodia, and he was just as corrupt as his colleague. A month and a half before the Battle of Geonosis, Chancellor Palpatine formed a Loyalist Committee to advise him on matters relating to the Separatist Crisis, which included Senator Coorr as one of the ten committee members. Nearly a month later, Coorr joined his friend Senator Farr in mocking the newly restructured Senate Bureau of Intelligence, picking an argument with Official Vyn Narcassan, who claimed there were transmissions of unheard of stealth coming in and out of Coruscant. Ronet Coorr marked the official a conspiracy theorist and publicly mocked him.

Less than a week after his run-in with SBI, Coorr traveled from Coruscant to Alsakan to participate in the Refugee Relief Movement Fundraiser, which was being attended by the biggest political and popular culture names in the galaxy. Coorr spent some time with celebrity gossip columnist Dyslogia Twang regarding traffic on Coruscant, a topic he was unable to extricate himself from all evening. Coorr nonetheless got his name circulating around the Holonet, and it was well regarded by political analysts trying to gauge the results of the upcoming ing Military Creation Act that Ronet Coorr would vote in favor, along with his good friend Senator Farr, who was now also on the Loyalist Committee.

The Analysts were correct, though it didn't matter as, days later, Chancellor Palpatine was awarded Emergency Powers and created the Grand Army of the Republic on his own, delighting Senator Coorr. A Republic Naval Fleet had been stationed at I seno in order to reinforce Duro if necessary, but a bribe by Senator Farr of several million credits, as well as exclusive contracts for rebuilding on Ando, convinced Senator Coorr to send a large segment of the fleet to the Rodia-Ando battlefield.

The act cost Ronet Coorr his political career, as Duro was attacked twenty-one months into the Clone Wars by General Grievous and the CIS forces taking part in Operation Durge's Lance. Twenty-two months into the Clone Wars, Senator Coorr tendered his resignation following the findings of a month-long investigation of the mismanagement surrounding the fall of Duro. Senator Coorr was officially censured, and criminal charges were made, though his fate is unknown.

Shayla Paige-Tarkin – Republic Senator of Eriadu

Shayla Paige-Tarkin was a female human from the industri-ous world of Eriadu who served as senator to the Seswenna sector in the Galactic Senate during the Clone Wars. Paige-Tarkin assumed the position of Senator sometime after the death of Senator Ranulph Tarkin some twenty-two years before the Clone Wars. Even though she had married into the Tarkin family, she was no less devout in her support of the Republic and the office of the Supreme Chancellor. In the months preceding the Battle of Geonosis when the Sluis sector seceded from the Republic and allied with the Separatists, Paige-Tarkin made a point to re-double Seswenna's allegiance to the Republic and express her disdain for the growing chaos in the Outer Rim stemming from the splintering of the Republic worlds.

Paige-Tarkin was one of the most devoted supporters of Supreme Chancellor Palpatine during the Clone Wars. In the thirtieth month of the war, Shayla was called upon by Palpatine to take part in an extremely sensitive discussion that could have grave consequences for the worlds she represented. The Separatist admiral Pors Tonith had led a fleet onto the planet of Praesitlyn and conquered, taking control of a major Republic hyper-communications node to the Outer Rim. Tonith could then use Praesitlyn as a staging point to begin taking planets in the Seswenna sector which would gain the Confederacy a major foothold to venture Coreward along the Rimma Trade Route.

A former pirate named Zozridor Slayke who led a military group known as the Freedom's Sons and Daughters fought desperately against the Separatist forces occupying Praesitlyn and required assistance from the Republic. Unfortunately the only forces that the Republic could spare were twenty thousand troops stationed at Coruscant on the moon of Centax One. Moving an entire legion of troops away from the capital could be construed as a bad idea by many senators and despite his emergency powers, Palpatine wanted the majority of the Senate to support his decision before moving forward. Palpatine begged those present at the secret meeting to utilize their good standing in the Senate to influence more senators to support this strategy. Paige-Tarkin gladly pledged her support to Palpatine and swayed many senators to Palpatine's side on the issue.

He would later find a secret to longevity and plague Leia Organa and Luke Skywalker, who eventually killed him.

Senator Viento: Senator Viento was a known Separatist collaborator, and helped arrange for the assassination of Former-Chancellor Valorum. He was found out and placed under guard of the Jedi while he was being interviewed for evidence and dangled as bait for Count Dooku, who sent Quinlan Vos to assassinate him. He was killed by Vos despite the protection of Master K'ruhk, and buried beneath the Senate Hall in the Senatorial tombs. ☹️

Silya Shessaun – Republic Senator of Thesme

Silya Shessaun was an unlikely candidate for Senator, though it was always known she was do great things as a politician. She had been enrolled in political career prep schools and the Legislative Youth Program since she could talk, even meeting Padmè Amidala at a summit on Alderaan months before the young girl from Naboo was elected Princess of Theed. Despite being five years her senior, the two became fast friends and kept up a relationship through holonet messaging. A year after the Battle of Naboo, just before Silya turned twenty-one, Silya became the first member of Thesme's working class to be elected to the Galactic Senate. It imparted on her a humble compassion that many blue-blood senators lacked.

At the time, Senator Shessaun was the youngest human ever to be elected Senator, a distinction she would lose years later to Senator Mon Mothma of Chandrilla. Silya Shessaun's first seven years in office were filled with humanitarian projects and a variety of relief programs throughout the galaxy. Two years before the Clone Wars would sweep across the Galaxy, Silya was delighted to find that her good friend Padmè Amidala would be moving to Coruscant. Padmè's term as Queen of Naboo had ended, and the new Queen Jamilya had immediately appointed her Senator from Naboo. Silya took great care to once again act as Padmè's mentor, and showed her the ropes of the Galactic Senate. The two spent much of their time working on the Refugee Relief Movement together, and an assortment of other peaceful initiatives.

A few short months after being reunited with her friend, Senator Shessaun was called back to the Thesme Sector, officially to settle local border disputes. The reality of the situation was far worse. Some factions on one side of the border dispute were seeking military aid from the Separatists. If given, the Separatists would take the undefended sector quickly. Being located in the Outer Rim at the junction of many key hyperspace routes, including the Hydian Way, Thesme's secessionist status would cut off the Republic from trade with the Corporate Sector Authority, a major supplier of raw materials to the galaxy. Desperate to avoid such an outcome, Silya Shessaun tirelessly politicked for remaining a part of the Republic, and after more than a year and a half, was able to settle the border disputes and keep her entire sector within the Republic. Of course, by then the Clone Wars had begun.

Senator Shessaun returned to Coruscant before the end of the first year of the Clone Wars, and latched on to Senator Amidala to catch her up on current events and alliances. Silya was brought in to the Loyalist faction, and was introduced to Senator Bail Organa, who also became a close friend. Senator Shessaun remained focused on refugee programs and other war relief efforts, and it was no surprise when, toward the end of the Clone Wars, she was invited to sign the Petition of the Two Thousand. However, despite how much she might agree with Padmè and Bail, Silya could not bring herself to sign the petition, as she felt undermining the Chancellor during this critical point in the war was tantamount to treason.

Very shortly after her refusal, Palpatine declared himself Emperor, and Padmè Amidala died before Silya could get a chance to tell her friend she was wrong not to sign the petition. Silya pushed for a detailed investigation into Padmè's death, but the Emperor blocked it handily. Senator Shessaun's days in office were numbered, and it wasn't long before she was replaced by a senator with a more pro-Imperial galactic view. She went quietly and retired to Alderaan, where she quietly helped Senator Bail Organa flame seeds of rebellion and collect intelligence against the Empire. She even helped raise young Leia Organa, who reminded her so much of the twelve year old girl from Naboo she met on Alderaan almost thirty years past.

Silya Shessaun returned to Thesme thirteen years after the end of the Clone Wars, where she was barely remembered by the public, but embraced by the family she had lost to political service. She grew close to her family members who had almost been strangers to her over the next seven years, and was shocked when Alderaan was destroyed, and her good friend Bail Organa was killed. Silya died of unknown causes shortly after the destruction of the second Death Star.

Terr Taneel – Republic Senator of the Senex Sector

Terr Taneel was born of the noble House Taneel, ruling house of Neelanon in the Senex Sector. The Senex Sector had a long history of slavery, and thus was previously not granted Republic membership or trading rights. However, in a deal negotiated by Palpatine's office and Lord Crueya Vandron, the Senex-Juvex Sectors were brought into the Republic fold after cracking down on Nebula Front strongholds in the Senex-Juvex Sectors. Terr Taneel was appointed as the Senex Sector's Senator, and Lord Crueya Vandron took up a position as Palpatine's aide during his days as chancellor.

Terr Taneel was close friends with Senator Chi Eekway, from Wroona. She felt the naive young Senator was far too trusting to be effective as a senator in the corruption rife throughout the Senate. Nonetheless, a month before the end of the Clone Wars, both were invited to meetings with Bail Organa, Mon Mothma,

TERR TANEEL

Padmè Amidala and others to discuss the erosion of liberty facing the Republic as the Chancellor's office gained more and more emergency powers.

Terr Taneel was present a month later to welcome the Chancellor back to Coruscant after his daring rescue by Anakin Skywalker and Obi-Wan Kenobi. She was again present with her friend Chi Eekway, and the two were relieved to see the Chancellor had survived his ordeal no worse for the wear. Meanwhile, the secret meetings continued at either Bail Organa or Padmè Amidala's apartments, where various options were discussed ranging from simple petitions to open rebellion. The least violent of options was decided on first, and Terr Taneel signed the Petition of the Two-Thousand.

Taneel began to fear her young colleague would accidentally reveal the existence of the secret group and the petition before it was served to Palpatine, and thus made certain to spend as many waking moments as possible with Chi Eekway, making certain the Twi'Lek Senator didn't say anything accidentally. Senator Taneel went so far as to accompany Eekway to the opera house where she was to meet with Baron Papanoida, an infochant. Terr did her best to listen in to their conversation, but was constantly interrupted by marriage overtures by Son Halliikeenovich, a lowly noble from House Halliikeenovich in the Juvex Sector. Marriage proposals to increase a house's prestige were common in the Senex-Juvex Sectors, and Terr Taneel did her best to politely rebuff him.

Tundra Dowmeia – Republic Senator of Mon Calamari

Tundra Dowmeia was a Quarren politician from Mon Calamari that came from a wealthy family in possession of a vast estate. He had great ambition, but as the Separatists began to grow their movement throughout the galaxy, he turned down a chance to join the Quarren Isolation League, trusting in democracy and the Republic. A little over two months before the Battle of Genosis, Senator Tikkes was implicated in a slavery ring, and Tundra Dowmeia found himself thrust into the position of acting Senator. Much of the Q.I.L. left Mon Calamari as Tikkes fled Coruscant, and rendezvoused with the Confederacy. Senator Dowmeia pledged that the Mon Calamari government would do everything in its power to assist in his recapture.

Senator Dowmeia was a devout loyalist, but also an idealist. He believed in helping those who were most in need. So it was no shock to the media when, a month into office, Senator Dowmeia spat criticism toward Commenor's First Minister when the man was upset Commenor was being denied regular shipments of exotic vegetables and breads to his planet. Tundra Dowmeia quickly poked at the politician's priorities, pointing out that the Arkanis Sector regularly went without food shipments for months, and that all would make sacrifices as a result of the Separatist crisis.

Two weeks later Senator Dowmeia was present with his mysterious aide, Cellheim Anuju, to watch Chancellor Palpatine get voted emergency powers, heralding the beginning of the Clone Wars. Hostilities broke out on Mon Calamari almost immediately between a new influx of Quarren isolationists and the Mon Cal Knights. Jedi Master Kit Fisto and a full battlegroup was sent to the planet five months into the war at Senator Dowmeia's urging, citing that Mon Calamari was one of the few worlds with robust shipyards not working for the Confederacy, an asset worth protecting. Kit Fisto's mission was a success, driving the isolationists to switch to guerilla tactics. Master Fisto managed to put a stop to that as well when he discovered the Moappa at the top of their chain of command. A tense cease-fire was formed between the two groups and negotiations were opened.

The negotiations moved very slowly, and Tundra Dowmeia divided his time between Mon Calamari and Coruscant. A year and three months after the cease-fire, a slicer team managed to steal vast amounts of shipbuilding data from Mon Calamari Shipyards in a slicer raid. Senator Dowmeia assisted Republic Authorities in tracking down the slicers and checking on security measures in place to protect such data. The timing of the raid served to implicate it might have something to do with the Senator's visit, an accusation that threatened to break down peace talks, which were on the verge of a major breakthrough.

TUNDRA DOWMEIA

Master Kit Fisto was sent back to Mon Calamari for a week, where the Jedi Nautolan oversaw the drawing up and signing of a formal treaty. Diplomacy won out, and a new Mon Calamari Council was formed, which struck more of an equal balance in governance between the Mon Calamari and the Quarren. From then on, the Galactic Senate would host two senators from the Quarren home world; Tundra Dowmeia and Meena Tills, a Mon Calamari. Senator Dowmeia signed the peace accord in his own ink, but still drew criticism from a small sect of Quarren, who feared he would eventually sell out the people of Mon Calamari.

Tundra Dowmeia found he got along quite well with Meena Tills, who was a fellow political idealist. Days before the end of the Clone Wars, they both signed the Petition of Two-Thousand, hoping to get the Chancellor to lay down some of his emergency powers and restore democracy. The petition was largely sidestepped by the Chancellor, who days later declared himself Emperor and outlawed the Jedi Order. Tundra Dowmeia was promptly arrested on the grounds of treason. While his fate is unknown after his capture, Mon Calamari would eventually become enslaved by the Galactic Empire.

Crueya Vandron – Lord to House Vandron

In the years prior to the Clone Wars, Crueya Vandron was Lord of one of the most ancient and powerful houses in the Senex Sector, half of the noble-ruled Senex-Juvex region in the Mid Rim, nestled between the Corellian Trade Spine and the Rimma Trade Route. A little over a decade before the Battle of Genosis, Lord Vandron married Theala Vandron, who became Lady of the House Vandron. Lady Vandron was nearly as active in galactic-scale politics as her husband, and was the Senex Sector representative to the Eriadu Peace Summit talks. At this time, the Senex-Juvex Sectors were actively seeking membership and trade within the Republic, but were routinely rebuffed, due to the fact that the Nebula Front, a terrorist organization that had recently attempted to assassinate Chancellor Valorum, had taken up residence in the sector with little action from the ruling houses, for fear of reprisal, as well as sentient rights violations.

Lord Vandron communicated with Senator Palpatine of Naboo and the nearby Chommel Sector, explaining his dilemma. Fortunately, the canny senator was able to provide a solution, based on the Republic's fear for Valorum's safety during the Eriadu Peace Summit, and a need for legislation regarding the taxation of outlying trade routes be pushed through. House Vandron aided a Joint Task Force comprised of Republic Judicials and Jedi Knights to wipe out the Asmeru, as well as agreed to assist with silence, rather than arrest with protest, the passing of the key legislation in exchange for a much more favorable stance toward Senex Sector membership status in the Republic.

Shortly after the events that led to the ascendancy of Palpatine to lead the Republic, Crueya Vandron was appointed as an Advisor to the Office of the Supreme Chancellor Palpatine. One year and four months into the Clone Wars, Crueya Vandron was able to push his high-human culture view on Palpatine, and established the Commission for the Protection of the Republic (COMPOR). This organization was dedicated to guarding the Republic, and was used by Palpatine mostly for domestic intelligence collection, propaganda, and military recruitment.

Perhaps the most successful branch of COMPOR was SAGroup, or Sub-Adult Group. This branch took promising young children in their teens and brainwashed them to be blind followers of the Republic and its Chancellor. SAGroup consisted almost entirely of pure humans, with less than 5% merely near-humans. The children enrolled in SAGroup were considered to get a very high-level education, and enrolling a child in SAGroup typically increased your political pull in the Galactic Republic. Thus, many members were heirs to noble titles throughout the galaxy, or the children of various senators and other political functionaries. SAGroup also nurtured a disdain for non-humans, though this prejudice was kept tightly under wraps from the media by Vandron himself.

CRUEYA VANDRON

Mere weeks after the end of the Clone Wars and the declaration of a Galactic Empire, with Palpatine as Emperor, Vandron reformed COMPOR into COMPNOR, the Commission for the Preservation of the New Order. Vandron personally oversaw the ceremony that cemented Imperial Culture in the galaxy for the next two decades. COMPNOR took over domestic spying, full control of the media through both propaganda and extreme censorship, and the lowering of many sentient species to slave race status.

Vandron would continue to grow COMPNOR, taking many of the best and brightest of humans in the galaxy and indoctrinating them in the ways of being a loyal Imperial Agent. Lord Vandron enjoyed great success with COMPNOR, which was largely responsible for many people forgetting the Old Republic altogether, and believing in the unyielding strength of the Galactic Empire. He maintained Emperor Palpatine's ear until his death of unknown circumstances, nearly thirty-one years after the end of the Clone Wars.

Doolb Snoil – Republic Barrister

Doolb Snoil was a Vippit born on Nal Hutta. He like so many other Vippits came from a long line of lawyers and negotiators. His family in particular was noted as one of the most skilled legal-minded families on all of Nal Hutta: his grandfather negotiated a variety of tax benefits for the Vippit under Republic law. When he was young, Snoil was studied at a prestigious law school on Mrlsst and later earned an apprenticeship with a prominent law firm in the Gevarno cluster. Soon afterwards he was appointed as a barrister by the Coruscant College of Law.

Ten years before the Clone Wars gripped the galaxy, Snoil was sent on a mission to Rijel-12 to negotiate terms and quell a potential rebel uprising. For all his legal and negotiate skill he was unable to halt the chaos that ensued and would have surely perished in the riot had a young Jedi named Obi-Wan Kenobi not stepped in and rescued him. The two maintained a close relationship for years, all the while Snoil vowed to repay Kenobi for his actions. According to Vippit traditions, those who save the life of a Vippit enter into an agreement that the Vippit that was saved must repay their rescuer before taking on a mate.

In the twelfth month of the Clone Wars, Kenobi and Snoil were reunited for a mission on the planet of Ord Cestus. The inhabitants of the planet, the insect-like X'Ting, had been contracted to create a new type of droid capable of countering a Jedi in combat. These new droids were dubbed the Jedi Killers or JK-series droids. He and Obi-Wan arrived at the capital ChikatLik to begin their discussions with the ruling Five Families and the regent. The talks did not go as well, the ruling council refused to stop production of their new droids. Secretly Jedi Master Kit Fisto and a group of clone troopers had been laying in wait in the outlying desert to perform a contingency mission if diplomacy fell through. Fisto disguised himself as a mercenary under the employ of the Confederacy named Nemonus and staged a kidnapping of the Five Families. Obi-Wan played his part and stepped in to rescue the council from him which ultimately persuaded the Five Families to agree to the Republic's terms.

As Snoil was overseeing the completion of the appropriate documentation for the agreement, the head of mining productions named Quill stepped in and provided evidence that the fight between Nemonus and Kenobi was a ruse. The Republic representatives were discredited and were ordered to leave the planet immediately. As the group headed into orbit Obi-Wan ordered the pilot to return Snoil to Coruscant while he returned to the planet in an escape pod, hidden from sensor detection by atmospheric phenomenon. Almost as soon as Kenobi launched from the craft, the transport carrying Snoil was struck by an orbital attack and destroyed.

Snoil was believed dead. Obi-Wan continued his mission and uncovered that Asajj Ventress was present on the planet and had been working with Quill from the beginning. As Obi-Wan regrouped with Kit Fisto and the desert team in a nearby cave they were ambushed by a group of JK-series droids. Obi-Wan managed to escape but was being targeted by an enemy infiltration droid. Before the would-be assassin could get a shot off, it was blasted to pieces by Snoil who had survived the crash. Kenobi and Snoil shared a brief reunion that was cut short by loose rock that fell from the ceiling of the cave from the fighting and crushed Snoil. Doolb Snoil died moments later in Obi-Wan's arms.

Griff Takel – Governor of Gargon

Griff Takel came from the planet Gargon in the Mandalore Sector along with his brother, Miltin. The two joined the military and while Miltin excelled at naval combat and tactics, Griff was just as adept, but not nearly as eager as his brother for warfare. After over a year of military service, Takel was removed from the front lines and sought a career in politics for unknown reasons. A year and four months into the Clone Wars, Griff was appointed as Governor of Esseles in the Darpa Sector of the Core when a local uprising ousted the planet's separatist presence.

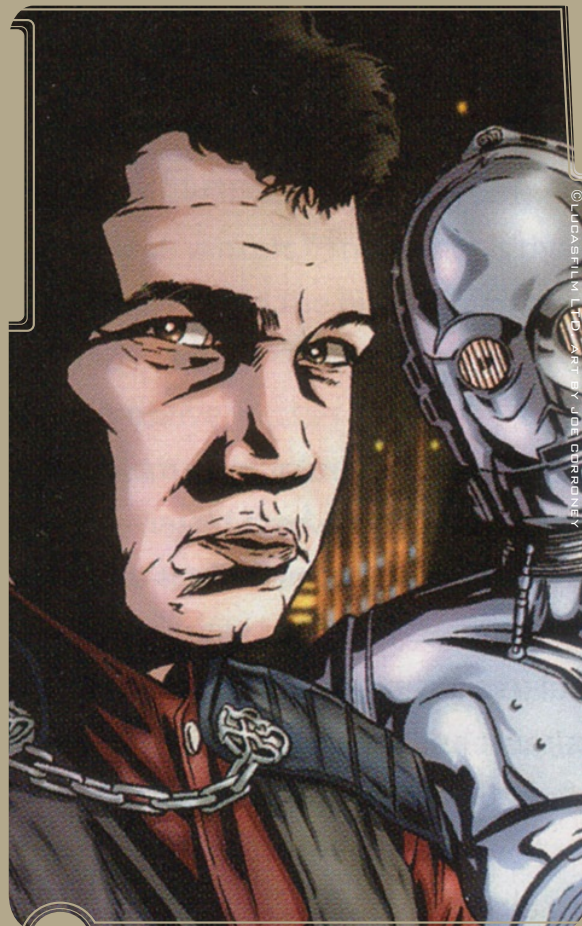

Governor Takel was a fairly easy-going man, and perhaps because he was appointed by the Republic during the Clone Wars, he was very different from the Imperial Moffs and Governors that were installed on other planets. Governor Takel largely allowed Esseles to govern itself through its president and congressional body known as the Hall, rarely, if ever, ruling over the planet with the iron fist his fellow governors were known for. His chief concern was the timely export of industry, which helped fuel the Grand Army of the Republic, and later the Imperial War Machine. When the Clone Wars ended, there was very little change to Governor Takel's position. He now answered to Moff Graffe, and his troops were renamed Imperial Stormtroopers. Meanwhile, his brother, Miltin Takel, rose to the rank of Grand Admiral, one of only twelve in the Imperial Navy.

Almost twenty years to the day, Governor Takel was informed that Gabriel Atanna, former Senator of Esseles prior to Griff Takel's governorship, had proven ties to the Rebel Alliance. Moff Graffe ordered Takel to hold his family prisoner, which he did, though rebel operatives were able to free the family. Governor Takel begrudgingly set up a detailed customs inspection for every ship leaving Esseles, frustrated that the wheels of industry should be disrupted for an insignificant rebel extraction. In spite of his security measures, or perhaps because of Takel's lack of passion for their capture, the rebels escaped with the former senator's family.

Governor Takel was well liked by the local populace, and the New Order Party had a substantial following. However, President Galle, a hero of the Clone Wars, was still extremely popular with the locals and held the majority of the Hall. Most from Esseles felt that their loyalty was to their own planet first, and then the Galactic Empire. Interested in changing that, Moff Graffe set up several straw-man operations on Esseles, where Imperial troops carried out acts of sabotage in the name of the Rebel Alliance to promote good faith in the Empire. Governor Takel was ignorant of such operations, and captured as many Imperial saboteurs as he did rebel ones. He became little more than a pawn of Moff Graffe, investigating incidents that were ultimately Graffe's doing, but were framed up to remove key anti-imperial leaders on Esseles.

A year and a half after the destruction of the Death Star, Graffe's planning and Takel's ignorance resulted in Esseles voting the New Order Party into majority control of the Hall, and leader Jamson Freller into the presidency. Takel's remaining career as Governor went smoothly despite an alien worker strike, which was resolved within a week, and the death of Emperor Palpatine. When Palpatine was killed, the New Republic sent a fleet to liberate Esseles. Governor Takel commanded his fleet in a small skirmish to provide cover for his retreat. His fate is unknown.

Jerrod Maclain – Governor of Brentaal

A greedy bureaucrat, Jerrod Maclain, after spending long months working with the Loyalist faction of the Senate, managed to get himself installed as regional governor of Brentaal in the Bormea Sector sixteen months into the Clone Wars. The world was forcefully taken back from the Separatists five months into the Clone Wars after Jedi Master Shaak Ti defeated Separatist Commander Shogar Tok. The Ruling House in the city of Cormond was quickly rebuilt by the Republic eleven months later, and Governor Maclain took up residence.

Guilds and shipping houses control most of the commerce on Brentaal, and all were eager to make the best of the situation and secure Republic contracts. The greedy Maclain quickly adapted to this new lifestyle, and spent the next twenty years accepting stock tips and bribes. When not amassing or cataloguing his vast fortune, Maclain was busy protecting himself from his own subordinates and rivals. Because of the easy fortunes associated with his position, there was a horde of individuals obsessed with usurping his governorship, particularly the members of Imperial Customs, who he frequently butted heads with.

The insider trading and bribes were so tempting, that many of his subordinates routinely reported Maclain's corruption to Imperial Authorities. Maclain was able to silence most of these reports before they ever reached Coruscant, but eventually some slipped through. Twenty-two years after the Clone Wars ended, then Grand Moff Ruffaen Tigellinus was sent to investigate exactly what liberties were being taken by the governor. While it was found that Governor Maclain frequently used smugglers to transport personal items, no major breaches of law were found to be worth the Empire's time. The Galactic-Civil war was in full swing, and domestic liberties were not a chief concern.

Two years later, shortly after the death of the Emperor and the Ssi-Ruuvi entanglement on Bakura, the war made its way back to Brentaal IV. By this time, Governor Maclain was spending so much time watching his back, he was largely ineffective as a governor. General Isoto was sent by acting-Emperor Pestage to guard the critical trade-planet from New Republic liberation. General Isoto had complete authority, and Governor Maclain was reduced to mere spectator as Rogue Squadron led their attack. It is unknown if Jerrod Maclain was able to flee with his fortune or if he was imprisoned by the New Republic.

Kaysil Verwood – Refugee Relief Movement Spokesbeing

Kaysil Verwood was one of the more compassionate beings in the known galaxy. A Zabrak, she saw past species boundaries and married a human early in her career. The couple traveled the galaxy, often with Kaysil's sister Elibet Dav performing charity work. Kaysil's husband was independently wealthy, and so without much need to work to support herself, Verwood joined the fledgling Refugee Relief Movement which formed nearly a year before the Battle of Geonosis. A sizable investment in the charity, along with a serendipitous sound bite on camera landed her the coveted position of Refugee Relief Movement Chief Spokesbeing.

The RRM's first crisis came when the planet Berchest was rocked by ground quakes two months before the Clone Wars. Spokesbeing Verwood worked tirelessly to make certain adequate transports were made available to shuttle refugees, that there were nearby planets willing to accept the refugees and that efforts were made to reunite families, as well as provide basic necessities. Spokesbeing Verwood made certain the disaster and the RRM got coverage on the holonets, which resulted in a major public relations coup for the movement. Days later, the Refugee Resettlement Coalition was formed. The RRM needed a branch with heavier transportation capabilities, and the reorganization helped the movement considerably by separating the transportation and relief branches.

Two weeks later, a deal was signed with Alderaan to transform one-hundred hectares into new homes for refugees from the Separatist crisis. Alderaan Royal Family member Celly Organa, a sister to Senator Bail Organa, took up the mantle of Chair of the Alderaan RRM, hoping to organize the land into homes for thousands of refugees, primarily Aqualish fleeing the open conflict on Ando, only a quick jump down the Corellian Run Trade Route. Former Chancellor Valorum himself was on hand to break ground on the first home, a testament to Spokesbeing Verwood's ability to promote the movement.

A month before the outbreak of the Clone Wars, Coruscant was beginning to feel the claustrophobia of overcrowding as refugees sought safe haven on the galactic capital. Coruscant Ministers of Ingress Effhod and Praji both made statements about new restrictions and licenses required to immigrate to Coruscant, knowing the restrictions would greatly reduce overall immigration of refugees. The RRM abhorred the action being taken on Coruscant, and for the rest of the war, Kaysil would frequently make inflammatory remarks aimed at the two Ministers. However, desperate to make the best of the situation, Kaysil Verwood made frequent statements on the holonet and in public addresses notifying refugees or potential refugees that there are other worlds allied with the Refugee Resettlement Coalition, including Alderaan in the Core, others in the Inner Rim and twenty-five worlds in the Mid Rim, more than happy to take on refugees.

Unfortunately, the twenty-five Mid Rim worlds were reduced to only ten within a week. The reality of taking on weary refugees struck many worlds much harder than they imagined. However, under populated Mid Rim worlds of Naboo, Monastary, Kalarba, Cerea, Sneeve, Bimmisaari, Durkteel, Ord Tessebok, Garos IV, and Ord Vreee all remained more than willing to provide sanctuary for all who needed it, though some worlds had odd requirements for their immigrating beings. Cerea allowed no higher technology or large machinery, while Monastary forced all immigrants to convert to the Order of the Circle.

Despite the loss of fifteen planets from its RRC program, the RRM was growing larger, and threatened to bankrupt itself by spreading too thin across the war-torn galaxy. Kaysil Verwood's solution was to host a fundraiser gala for the political elite on Alsakan three weeks before the Clone Wars began. The event was attended by nearly every important politician in the Republic, including Chancellor Palpatine, Sly Moore, Kinman Dorian, Jar Jar Binks, Wat Tambor, Passel Argente, Nute Gunray, Padmè Amidala, Former Chancellor Valorum, Lexi Dio, Ask Aak, Tendau Bendon, Ronet Coorr, and gossip queen Dyslogia Twang. The event raised over seventy-five million credits for the RRM, and was the first of many similar events held throughout the Clone Wars. While Kaysil Verwood had initially planned to have select refugees attend free of charge, the idea was shot down by security. Brookish Boon, who was not in attendance, made several crude comments about the hypocrisy of the event, but Kaysil was able to rebuff him in front of the media at the gala fundraiser.

Kaysil Verwood continued to work tirelessly over the next year, helping millions of refugees find sanctuary within the Republic as they fled their secessionist planets. The ravaged planet of Atraken had been a battleground since days after the Battle of Geonosis, and when the fighting finally ended, it ended in disaster. An estimated ninety percent of the million inhabitants were thought dead or displaced on the inhabitable moon of Trilos. Spokesbeing Verwood was eager to get transports there to help the survivors, but the space surrounding the moon had been mined, and weeks were needed to clear the minefield. Verwood confirmed the planet Atraken uninhabitable, as the Separatists used chemical weapons in a last stand against Republic forces. The deadly chemicals tainted the water-ways and soil of Atraken permanently.

When the Clone Wars ended and Palpatine declared himself Emperor, Verwood realized she would soon be a target of imperial arrest or worse. She quickly fled with her husband and sister to join the Rebel Alliance, where she formed an covert transportation network for refugees from the empire, resulting in many joining the Alliance as thanks for asylum. After the death of Emperor Palpatine over Endor, the Zabrak people united thrust Verwood into the position of Zabrak Representative. Representative Verwood was present at the first Galactic Caucus of the New Republic, later serving as Senator, representing all the Zabrak worlds, including Iridonia.

Orman Tagge – Baron to the House of Tagge

Orman Tagge was the oldest son of Baroness Sanya Tagge, head of the House of Tagge, and therefore, TaggeCo. Orman was groomed from his youth to be the eventual successor to his mother as Baron, and as such, was sent to only the finest schools and social institutions. He had a large family, including brothers Silas, Cassio and Ulric, and sister Domina, of whom he was very protective. Not long before the Clone Wars erupted, Orman proved himself to be a prodigy in the field of engineering, making technological breakthroughs at every turn, specifically in the droid industry with his L8-L9, which was manufactured in a very small prototype run.

When the Clone Wars finally did sweep across the galaxy, Baroness Tagge pulled TaggeCo from the Techno Union and instead remaining neutral, threw her full support behind the Republic. Early in the Clone Wars, Orman Tagge sought to test his L8-L9 Battle Droid in the gladiatorial pits on Rattatak. Unfortunately, Asajj Ventress destroyed the single unit Orman deployed with ease by using the force to bash it into rocks, crushing the delicate head. The project was tabled for a short period of time, though Orman used the small run as his personal bodyguard entourage.

During the twentieth month of the Clone Wars, Sanya Tagge died and at the young age of seventeen, Orman Tagge was named Baron of the House of Tagge. He immediately pledged to fulfill his mother's wishes and use TaggeCo's vast resources to bring an end to the Clone Wars. A month later, he was approached by Senate Bureau of Intelligence Director Armand Isard, who offered him a position as Chair of the Technical Steering Committee within the Analysis Bureau of Republic Intelligence. Baron Tagge happily accepted his new role, and worked hard to counter emerging Separatist technology for the remainder of the Clone Wars.

While Orman put a great deal of time into assisting the Republic, as new Baron of the House of Tagge, he had much house business to attend to as well. He was now in command of a vast conglomerate of businesses, including Bonadon Heavy Industries, Tagge Mining Company, GalResource Industries, Mobquet Swoops and Speeders, Gowix Computers, Trast Heavy Transports, Tagge Restaurant Association, the Biscuit Baron chain of fast-food restaurants, Tagge Industries Shipyards Limited, TaggeCo itself, Neuro-Savv Corporation, Tagge Industries, Tagge Shipping and the Team Tagge Swoop Racing League. TaggeCo also controlled a handful of planets, and a navy of five-thousand armed scout ships and a million security troops. Management of the corporations took up much of Orman's time, but he still managed to find time to relax from all the bureaucratic nonsense with new technical puzzles sent by Director Isard, or new modifications to his L8-L9 Battle Droids.

When the Clone Wars finally ended, Baron Tagge had finally managed to get his various subsidiaries to become much more self-sufficient, allowing him to focus on increasing the power and prestige of his company in the newly formed Galactic Empire. Baron Tagge sought to make himself Emperor Palpatine's right hand man, vying to beat out both Darth Vader and Prince Xizor. Of course, Baron Tagge had no real chance in the Emperor's eyes against Darth Vader, who eventually used his lightsaber to slash the young man across the eyes, blinding him. Tagge was fitted with a pair of cybernetic goggles that allowed him to see again, and swore vengeance on Lord Vader. Not wanting his sister Domina to see him incapacitated, he sent her off to the Order of the Sacred Circle on the planet Monastary to become a priestess.

Tagge did his best to counter his vanity by having a cutely animated version of his face used as the main character on the signs outside Biscuit Barons, but inwardly he seethed each time he saw a commercial with his goggled visage showcased in it. It kept his anger toward Darth Vader red hot. Soon after the incident, Orman Tagge met with several other tech-based business beings that were re-negotiating the Corporate Sector Authority with the Galactic Empire on Aargu in the Dragonbird Gardens. Orman signed several of his companies on to the project, and his ties to the Empire helped reaffirm the CSA's autonomy while securing several exclusive deals with the Galactic Empire for supply of raw materials.

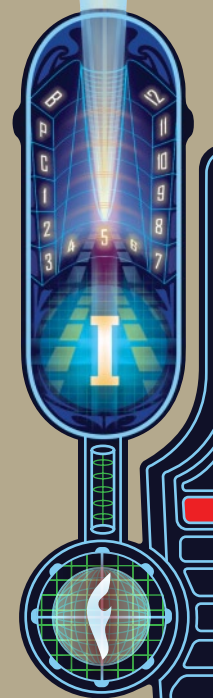

Over the course of the twenty years leading up to the Battle of Yavin, two of his younger brothers joined Imperial Service. While Ulric Tagge had not yet amounted to much, Cassio Tagge had become a respected general, and was stationed onboard the first Death Star, which later became his grave. Silas Tagge remained with the company as a scientist, working on several projects for Orman. Domina remained at Orman's side, acting as his confidante. As a result of his two brothers in the Imperial Military, as well as his own still loyal contacts in the Imperial government, TaggeCo was often given exclusive rights to alien technologies from populations subjugated by the Empire, such as blaster cartridge technology unique to Tiss'Sharl.

Shortly after the destruction of the first Death Star, and the loss of his brother, Baron Tagge focused on helping the Emperor end the existence of the Rebels with his Actchnak Turbine Station, a starfighter base designed to be stationed in the troposphere of a gas giant, such as Yavin. Tagge built the starfighter base there secretly immediately after the destruction of the Death Star reached his ears, and gave it to his brother Ulric to use to secretly fly harassment missions against the Alliance base to prevent a full scale retreat to another world. Meanwhile, the entire area was blockaded by Ulric Tagge's Imperial Naval Forces to keep the rebels cornered until full Imperial Reinforcements could be sent in to mop up the Rebels.

Unfortunately, Baron Tagge's station was compromised by Luke Skywalker and Leia Organa before being destroyed by Skywalker, reducing Tagge in the eyes of the Emperor. Luckily, Baron Tagge was able to follow Skywalker's Force-guided path out of the foggy troposphere, and learn the name of his humiliator before escaping to Ulric's blockade. This enraged him, forcing him to swear an oath against Skywalker similar to the one sworn against Darth Vader.

Luke and Leia would continue to frustrate Orman Tagge's efforts to eclipse Lord Vader's influence with the Emperor. Leia foiled his supposedly perfect security system on Metalorn, and beat the lightsaber-carrying Baron in personal combat. Not long afterward, Luke Skywalker prematurely ended his first attempt at a super-weapon, the Omega Frost, designed by Orman's brother Silas. Luke discovered the project being tested on Tatooine, but was later captured by Baron Tagge's forces. Orman sought to test his lightsaber skill against a talented opponent, but Luke ended the fight quickly by slicing Baron Tagge's cybergoggles in half, rendering him blind. Tagge went into shock, while Luke escaped and exploited a flaw in the design of Omega Frost, disabling it before it could be used in a trap against the Alliance fleet.

The Rebel fleet took advantage of the situation and destroyed the House of Tagge ship, believing they had destroyed both Orman and Silas Tagge. In truth, they both survived in a reinforced compartment, later rescued by other Imperials and kept in stasis, while the mantle of Baron Tagge fell to Ulric, the youngest of the four Tagge brothers, who still believed his two remaining older brothers dead. While Orman lay unconscious, Darth Vader schemed with Ulric and Domina Tagge to draw out Luke Skywalker and take his true measure. Luke was lured to the planet Monastary, where Domina had risen to a high position on their Order of the Sacred Circle.

During Luke's entrapment, Orman Tagge managed to escape his Imperial medical prison onboard Vader's flagship and board the Millennium Falcon. Orman ordered Han Solo, Chewbacca and Leia Organa to fly the Falcon down to Monastary, where he could remove his sister Domina from Imperial machinations and exact revenge on his two enemies, Darth Vader and Luke Skywalker. He ran headlong into a perilous crystal valley, and a moment before being crushed beneath a toppling crystal spire, Vader rescued him with the Force. In too high a state of shock to attack, Darth Vader explained how he had corrupted Domina, pushing Orman into anguish. Vader then used the Jedi Mind Trick to force Orman to engage Luke Skywalker in lightsaber combat.

Orman faced Luke Skywalker, but due to Darth Vader's force illusions, Luke believed he was facing Darth Vader himself. Orman dueling his best, but was fearful of Skywalker's superior lightsaber skills. In the end, his fears proved correct, as Luke was forced to kill him with a fatal lightsaber thrust. Ulric retired from military service but continued on as Baron Tagge for the next thirty-five years, maintaining the House of Tagge's prosperous growth that began under Orman.

Wilhuff Tarkin – Governor of Eriadu

Wilhuff Tarkin was a human male from the planet Eriadu, and would become one of the most powerful men in the galaxy. The Tarkin family was one of the most powerful and influential names in the entire Seswenna sector. Wilhuff began making a name for himself in his early twenties when he joined the military. During his tour he forged alliances with beings such as Raith Seinar and married into the authoritative Motti family of Phelarion. Within a few short years he had risen to the position of Lieutenant Governor of the Seswenna sector and rubbed elbows with many high-ranking beings such as the current Supreme Chancellor Valorum and Senator of Naboo Palpatine.

Eleven years before the Clone Wars began; Lieutenant Governor Tarkin received Supreme Chancellor Valorum into his manor on Eriadu during his stay for a Trade Summit with the Trade Federation. During the conference a freak accident occurred as one of the security droids went haywire and gunned down all of the members of the Trade Federation Directorate. Only Nute Gunray survived, who became the Trade Federation's new Viceroy and gave way to a Neimoidian-monopolized Trade Federation. Investigations into the matter took place but Tarkin sabotaged these inquiries at the behest of Senator Palpatine who even then had great and terrible things in store for the Republic.

Three years later after Senator Palpatine had been appointed as the new Supreme Chancellor of the Republic, he saw to it that Wilhuff Tarkin became Governor of Seswenna and appointed him as Commander of the Republic Outland Regions Security Force. With this new authority, Tarkin promoted his brother Gideon from Brigadier to the Minister of Defense for all of Seswenna. Tarkin also resumed correspondence between his former military comrade Raith Seinar who presented Tarkin with his plans for a battle station the size of a moon. Tarkin then convinced Seinar to invade and occupy the living planet of Zonoma Sekot, although these attempts ultimately failed when the entire planet escaped into hyperspace traveling into the Unknown Regions. Tarkin was able to save face with his mentor, Chancellor Palpatine, by infiltrating the Jedi Order and eavesdropping on their deliberations by supplying a broken droid equipped with monitoring devices to a young and naïve Jedi Padawan named Anakin Skywalker. Tarkin also supplied Palpatine with Seinar's battle station plans that would have grievous ramifications on the galaxy in the decades to come.

As Supreme Chancellor Palpatine transformed the Republic into the Galactic Empire, Tarkin continued to gain prestige within the newly formed Imperial military. An Admiral within the Imperial navy, Tarkin was placed in charge of overseeing the construction of the battle station envisioned by Raith Seinar, the Death Star. Tarkin was also responsible for some of the greatest atrocities in the name of the Empire. One such instance at Ghorman saw a group of protestors objecting the Imperial taxation of their planet on a landing platform as Tarkin's shuttle made its approach. Having no patience or care for the mob and their plight, Tarkin ordered the pilot to land regardless of the protestors. The shuttle crushed hundreds of people, marking the Massacre of Ghorman. For his cruelty and ruthlessness, Emperor Palpatine promoted the Admiral to one of the first Moffs of the Empire.

By Tarkin's authority, the planets of Kashyyyk and Mon Calamari were subjugated and enslaved to provide forced laborers in the construction of the Death Star. Wilhuff even took a Mon Calamari named Ackbar as his personal servant. Moff Tarkin also initiated a secret Imperial facility dedicated to the creation of super weapons deep within an area of space near Kessel known as the Maw. He appointed his lover, Admiral Daala, as the commanding overseer of this facility. With his growing influence within the Empire, Tarkin proposed a doctrine directly to the Emperor which he called Rule by Fear. In it he detailed an upper command structure within the Empire where Grand Moffs would preside over entire regions of space and have a much greater authority to rule their territories how they saw fit. Palpatine admired Tarkin's ambition and adopted this philosophy, dubbing it the Tarkin Doctrine and appointed the Moff as one of the first Grand Moffs to serve the Empire.

By this time nearly a decade after the Clone Wars, rebellion against the Empire had swept across the galaxy and began organizing into cohesive military forces. One such instance of rebel insurgence took place over Tarkin's home planet of Eriadu. Rebel agents attempting to assassinate the Grand Moff were foiled by the prowess of the Imperial Starfleet. However, Tarkin's servant Ackbar was allowed to escape and ultimately became a hero of the newly formed Rebel Alliance.

Tarkin's ambition continued to grow. With the Death Star nearing completion, Tarkin planned on turning the planet-destroying battle station on Coruscant in order to eliminate the Emperor and assume control of the galaxy. The Emperor foresaw this move, and dispatched Colonel Wulf Yularen and emissary Darth Vader to keep the Grand Moff in check. As such, Tarkin began pursuing his alternative avenue of interest: the complete and total destruction of the Rebel Alliance.

After the Rebel spy, Leia Organa was captured and brought to the hulking battle station; Tarkin threatened the obliteration of Organas home planet of Alderaan if she did not divulge the location of the Rebel base. Tarkin had no intention of sparing the peaceful planet though. Even though Leia provided him with the name he requested, Tarkin gave the order and transformed Alderaan into a barren asteroid field, killing every living inhabitant of the world. Tarkin had anticipated the destruction of Alderaan would serve as an example to other would-be Rebel sympathizers. Unfortunately the effect was the exact opposite, as the planet of Alderaan would live on as an effigy to the tyranny of the Empire and as a symbol of the Rebel cause.

When Princess Leia escaped execution onboard the Death Star carrying detailed plans to the battle station back to the Rebel high command, Tarkin was hot on her trail. Having discovered the location of the Rebel base, Tarkin attempted to smite them from the universe once and for all. The Rebels launched a desperate attack based on an analysis of the plans provided by Leia Organa. Tarkin's ego got the better of him as he scoffed at the idea that a ragtag group of Rebels could possibly threaten his Death Star. Unfortunately for Tarkin and the thousands of Imperials onboard the station, Tarkin was gravely mistaken as a rookie pilot named Luke Skywalker fired a salvo of proton torpedoes into an exposed exhaust port. This set off a chain reaction that destroyed the entire station, eradicating everyone onboard including Grand Moff Tarkin.

Jos Vondar – RMSU-7 Chief Surgeon

Jos Vondar was born into a family of physicians and raised in a small farming community on Corellia. His family was devout Ensterite, a cultural system that believed sentient beings should only marry from those born on the same planet and followed the Ensterite teachings. When Jos was twenty years old he left his home planet for Coruscant to pursue a career in medicine. When the Clone Wars erupted, Vondar had dreams of becoming widely known as a top-notch surgeon on the front lines of conflict. Instead two years into the Clone Wars, he was stationed in the RMSU-7 military hospital on Drongar at the rank of Captain and was appointed as the facility's chief surgeon overseeing the medical corps there.

JOS VONDAR

During his stay at Rimsoo seven Jos became friends with a variety of characters. Vondar became quite close to a clone trooper designated CT-914 as well as the droid I-5YQ. He became best friends with his roommate, a fellow surgeon named Zan Yant. He also became emotionally interested in a nurse stationed at the Rimsoo named Tolk le Trene, but because of his strict Enster beliefs he did not pursue that relationship. Tolk, on the other hand, endeavored tirelessly to gain Vondar's attention. After a Separatist attack on RMSU-7 Zan Yant and CT-914 were killed and Jos had an epiphany. He realized that life was too important to pass up relationships due to ones' beliefs and initiated a romantic connection with Tolk le Trene and a fellowship with his new roommate, Kornell Divini.

When RMSU-7 was relocated, Vondar's uncle, Admiral Erel Kersos, was assigned to replace the former commander Tarnese Bleyd, who died during the Separatist attack. Long ago Kersos had married an offworlder woman and according to the beliefs of his family and friends was exiled. The admiral learned of the relationship between his nephew and Tolk le Trene, and had the nurse reassigned to his ship so that he could convince her to end the relationship for Vondar's sake. Jos missed le Trene deeply and during their time apart, Vondar was presented with a difficult predicament. The Zabrak mercenary, Sar Omant, who had killed his friend Zan Yant was brought before him needing medical attention. Vondar wanted nothing more than to see Omant dead, but resisted the temptation to exact revenge on the mercenary.

When Tolk returned only to give Jos the cold shoulder he fell into despair. When he could bare it no longer, he confronted Tolk and revealed his feelings for her. He asked Tolk for her hand in marriage and for her to return to Corellia with him when the fighting was over. Tolk whole-heartedly accepted, but the battle at Drongar was slowly boiling over.

The Jedi Barriss Offee stationed at Rimsoo seven had been investigating the possibility of a traitor residing in the facility. Her inquires paid off when an Equani named Klo Merit was revealed as the turncoat, working for both the Separatists and the Black Sun crime syndicate. Vondar's rage broke the surface and he confronted Merit, blaming him for the deaths of his friends. Merit escaped custody and attempted to flee the complex, but Vondar grabbed a blaster and fired on the Equani. His shots hit their mark and Merit was slain. As the fighting at Drongar came to a close, Vondar was seen as a hero for neutralizing an enemy of the Republic. Jos soon left the facility with his fiancé Tolk le Trene and his uncle and returned to his home planet.

Kornell Divini – RMSU-7 Surgeon

Kornell Divini was a human male hailing from Tatooine. Although his mother was the famous mudopterist Elana Divini, the majority of his family was one with a long lineage of physicians. His father, grandfather and great grandfather ran their own practice on Talus but Uli, as he was nicknamed, wanted to venture out and see the galaxy. He studied medicine at the Coruscant Medical Hospital and held an internship at the Galactic Polysapient Medical Center on Alderaan by the time he was nineteen years old.

During the third year of the Clone Wars, Divini enrolled in the Grand Army of the Republic's medical corps. After a Separatist attack on the RMSU-7 military hospital on Drongar, a desperate need for skilled surgeons arose. Kornell was fasttracked, granted the rank of Lieutenant and shipped off to Drongar to replace a surgeon named Zan Yant who had been killed in the attack. When he arrived he was met with skepticism due to his lack of completed medical training, but he quickly proved to be a valuable member of the surgical staff.

Uli was bunked with Chief Surgeon Jos Vondar and soon afterward the two became close friends. He also shared a professional relationship with the Jedi Barriss Offee. The two made several excursions out into the wild of Drongar to collect indigenous insects for Uli's mother to add to her already renowned collection for the Coruscant Xenozoology Museum. Additionally, in his spare time Kornell proved to his colleges how talented he was at a hand of Sabaac. The other surgeons would often joke that his skill was compounded by his totally innocent and wholesome appearance.

Zan Yant – RMSU-7 Surgeon

A Zabrak native to Talus in the Corellian system, Zan Yant was born into an extremely wealthy family. He received the best medical training the galaxy had to offer. In addition to his medical training, Zan was classically trained in the art of music. Yant once studied the quetarra with a professor who formerly taught at the prestigious Coruscant School of Music. Although his musical talents had become fairly well known among the Zabrak, when the violence of the Clone Wars swept across the galaxy Zan did his part by joining the Grand Army of the Republic's medical corps and was stationed at the RMSU-7 military hospital at Drongar.

While he served at the Rimsoo he became close friends with his roommate, Jos Vondar. In what few rest breaks they had, Zan would play his quetarra as a means of relaxing himself and Jos. Vondar claimed it was one of the few things that helped keep him sane amongst all the carnage the conflict of the Clone Wars brought their way. Yant astonished all of those who heard his musical talent to the point where they wondered why he didn't become a professional musician.

In the beginning of the third year into the war, RMSU-7 fell under siege from a Separatist attack. Yant and the other surgeons scrambled to evacuate. During the commotion of the evacuation Zan dropped the case containing his quetarra and was forced to leave it behind if he and the others were to reach the transport in time for a safe escape. Fortunately a Sullustan reporter named Den Dhur was able to retrieve the case for Zan as he boarded the shuttle. However, during this joyful moment a Confederate missile struck the transport, spraying shrapnel into the passenger compartment. Zan Yant was hit by the rain of metal, severing his spinal cord killing him almost instantly.

Tolk le Trene – Republic Nurse

Tolk le Trene was a female Lorradian who worked as a nurse during the Clone Wars. At the start of the third year of the war, le Trene was stationed at the RMSU-7 military hospital on Drongar. During her residency at the Rimsoo, she became physically attracted to Corellian surgeon Jos Vondar. Although she was aware Vondar was a follower of the Corellian Enster tradition of not becoming intimately involved with non-Corellians, Tolk vehemently pursued the potential relationship by making it impossible for the doctor to overlook her flirtatious behavior.

le Trene eventually broke Vondar's resolve and the two began having an affair. Their relationship continued until Jos' uncle, Admiral Erel Kersos, was transferred to Drongar. Kersos was aware of his nephew's tryst and had Tolk transferred aboard Medstar 19 for a series of Medical Education seminars so that he might confront her about the situation. The admiral had also married an offworlder and was exiled from his family because of it. Due to the conversations Tolk had with Admiral Kersos, when she returned to the Rimsoo she became withdrawn towards Vondar as a test of their relationship.

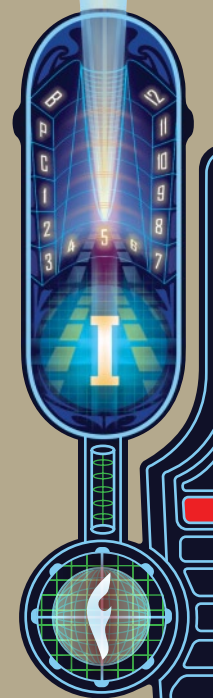

As a result of the about-face in her behavior, Tolk was suspected of sabotage since she had been present on MedStar 19 during a suspicious explosion. She was quickly vindicated, however, when she explained the situation to Jedi Barriss Offee. le Trene finally reestablished communication with Vondar and he pleaded with her to return with him to his home when the battlefield on Drongar subsided. Knowing that Vondar would cope with his exile if they were to be married, she agreed. le Trene and Vondar returned to Corellia after the conflict had ceased as a pair.

I-5YQ – Protocol Droid

I-5YQ began life as a YQ boutique series modification to the Cybot Galactica Protocol Droid line. I-Five was initially purchased by a wealthy family to act as a nanny to their children. Unfortunately, the spoiled children amused themselves most often by abusing I-Five and having him walk off various ledges to see how high he would bounce. The droid eventually ended up in the hands of a junk dealer on Coruscant, and was purchased by information broker and deal maker Lorn Pavan, formerly an employee of the Jedi Temple.

Lorn Pavan initially felt that I-Five might have some information in its memory about the noble family it used to work for, but soon recognized the droid as something of a kindred spirit. Pavan spent what few hard-conned credits he had left on giving I-Five full sentience by removing his creativity dampeners and boosting his cognitive functions considerably, achieving a level of humanity only seen in droids that have gone several decades without a memory wipe. Pavan then gave I-Five his freedom, but offered to work with him as a business partner in the Coruscant underworld.

Together, the duo ran several scams as con artists, including fraud, gambling scams, black marketeers, and infochants. The partnership lasted solidly for five years, until, eleven years before the Clone Wars would erupt, and the pair was cheated out of a 50,000 credit deal by a crooked Toydarian fence. To recover financially, I-Five and Pavan accepted a job, on I-Fives suggestion, from a desperate Neimoidian who was selling information on Trade Federation plans to blockade the peaceful Naboo system. I-Five committed a major act of bank fraud to come up with the initial stake to buy the information off the Neimoidian, and the two hoped to sell the information back to a local Hutt crime lord and flee to the Outer Rim with their newly acquired wealth before the fraud could be detected.

Unfortunately, the blockade was a Sith plot, and Darth Maul was dispatched by Lord Sidious to silence all who knew about the impending blockade. I-Five and Lorn Pavan were identified by the Sith warrior in the middle of making their final transaction with the Hutt crime lord, which began the chase. Lorn and I-Five soon found themselves in a speeder occupied by two Jedi, Master Anoon Bondara and Padawan Darsha Assant. The two perceptive Jedi quickly identified Maul as a Sith, and Master Bondara sacrificed himself to slow Darth Maul down long enough for his Padawan, I-Five and Lorn Pavan to escape, hoping they would make it to the Jedi Temple to report the reemergence of the Sith and the planned blockade.

The trio crashed their speeder and began a legendary run for the Jedi Temple while chased by the Sith. They were captured by Cthon cannibals, who they managed to escape from thanks to I-Five's sonic projectors and finger blasters. However, they were soon trapped on a narrow bridge, caught between a deadly Taozin and Darth Maul. I-Five initiated a daring escape plan, which nearly killed Lorn Pavan and Darsha Assant, but it only delayed the inevitable. Shortly afterward, all three were trapped in a carbonite freezing plant with Darth Maul.

Padawan Assant followed her master's example and sacrificed herself to Darth Maul while I-Five froze both himself and Lorn Pavan in carbonite. The nature of Assant's sacrifice saw the entire plant explode, and Darth Maul left the droid and infochant for dead. I-Five was happy to escape, but his partner wanted revenge for the murder of Darsha Assant. Lorn made I-Five promise to look after his son, Jax Pavan, a student at the Jedi Temple, before shutting the droid down and giving him to Tuden Sal, a friend that owed him a favor. He instructed Sal to deliver I-Five to the Jedi Temple, and went off after Darth Maul, who ultimately killed Lorn Pavan.

Unfortunately, I-Five was never brought to the Jedi Temple by Tuden Sal. Instead, Sal wiped I-Five's memory and used him for his own business. Eventually, he sold the droid to a group of Glitterstim spice smugglers who worked the Kessel Run. Despite the growing tension in the galaxy, it wasn't long before the smugglers were captured by Republic Judicials, and I-Five was impounded. At a judicial auction, I-Five was purchased by a family of nobles on Naboo, who kept the droid for a short time before he was donated to the war effort as the Clone Wars broke out across the galaxy.

I-Five was given a full medical software package and pressed into service as a triage nurse and utility droid for Republic Mobile Surgical Unit 7 on Drongar two years into the Clone Wars. During his time at RMSU-7, I-Five began making large strides in recovering his memory, and hardware functions he had forgotten were installed. Within a few months, he had fully restored his entire memory and functionality, remembering his promise to Lorn Pavan to look after his son, Jax. This created a major moral dilemma for I-Five, a new experience for him, as he was torn between his duty for the Republic and his duty to his dead friend, Lorn Pavan.

During the months he spent on Drongar, I-Five grew to be close friends with Den Dhur, a Sullustan holonet news reporter who made a promise to get I-Five drunk, as well as Dr's Zan Yant and Jos Vondar, Nurse Tolk le Trene, and Jedi Padawan Barriss Offee. The group often had philosophical discussions while playing Sabacc in the local cantina, such as the merit of droid and clone sentience, and matters of the war. I-Five also grew close to a TDL series waitress droid named Teedle, who he later reluctantly helped scrap for parts to repair a damaged protective dome, much to his dismay. Eventually, Den Dhur made good on his mission to get I-Five intoxicated, and after a humorous performance and one lost arm, I-Five came to a drunken epiphany concerning his moral quandary concerning Jax Pavan, and decided he had to find a way to get to Coruscant, even if it meant abandoning the Republic.

Fortunately, Padawan Barriss Offee presented a means of travel to Coruscant that would not include running away. I-Five was tasked with delivering both a message and vial to the Jedi Temple. Before I-Five had a chance to leave, Drongar was deserted by the Republic, and Barriss Offee found she also had to travel to Coruscant.

Fortunately, she allowed I-Five to continue the mission she set for him. I-Five also convinced friend Den Dhur to accompany him, forming a partnership similar in tone to the one he shared with Lorn Pavan. The three presumably traveled to Coruscant together, and it is believed I-Five was able to make contact with Jax Pavan, who survived Order-66 and managed to hide out on Coruscant, likely due to I-Five's intervention.
