The Star Wars Name Gazetteer & Compendium. Version 4.0

by Nicholas Leydig

This version could not be possible without the hard work that Mike Kelly did through his previous 3 versions. Using the same format, this edition has been greatly expanded, and has strived to list all major races in the star wars universe.

Bitthævrian

Bitthævrian naming convention was atypical, with a Bitthævrian having three or four names. The first name of a Bitthævrian was the season when he or she was born. There are seven seasons in Guiteica: Giil, Quul, Aul, Zuol, Tweil, Jael and Quaal. The second name is the family name, which was inherited from the mother's maternal surname. A male Bitthævrian adopted a third name when married: His wife's surname.

The fourth name (third in females and single males) was the Bitthævrian's personal name, used normally only as a form of familiar address, by friends, family, and cohorts.

First Names: Aul, Giil, Jael, Tweil, Quul, Quaal, Zuol

Chiss

Chiss have long three-part names, which they abbreviate when dealing with non-Chiss. Chiss names were composed of three distinct sections, usually following the convention of the first and last being family names and the middle being the given name. Abbreviated versions of these, known as "core names", were reserved for use among friends and acquaintances. However, this policy was apparently eschewed when dealing with outsiders who had trouble pronouncing Chiss full names. The predominance of core names, at least in communication with outsiders, was such that a number of such names were recorded without the full name being known, such as Prakk, Kayree, Lev, Szardra, Voss and Zilvad.

Apparently, the core name was typically formed by combining the short central section of the name with the last sound of the preceding section and the opening sound of the following. For example, Mitth'raw'nuruodo was Thrawn, Kres'ten'tarhi was Stent and Brast'alshi'barku was Talshib. The female officers Hess'irolia'nuruodo (Irolia) and Ina'ganet'nuruodo (Ganet) appear to be exceptions to this rule.

The Chaf diplomats Chaf'orm'bintrano ("Formbi") and Chaf'ees'aklaio ("Feesa") bore the name of the Ruling Family to which they belonged as the first element of their full name, and this also defined the opening sound of their core name. Likewise the brothers Mitth'raw'nuruodo and Mitth'ras'safis were both (adoptive) members of the Eighth Ruling Family, suggesting that this family was known as the Mitth. A similar family relationship is implied between General Prard'ras'kleoni ("Drask") and Station Commander Prard'enc'iflar, although it is not known whether "Prard" is one of the Nine Ruling Families.

Senior Chiss military personnel surrendered Family status on assuming high command. Admiral Ar'alani of the Defense Hierarchy and possibly Sev'rance Tann of the CIS seem to have eliminated their Family designation from their names.

The Fel Empire and later Krayt Empire Moff Fehlaaur'aitel'loro was consistently addressed by his fellow Moffs as Fehlaaur, the section usually reserved for the family name.

The four ruling families of the Chiss species – Csapla, Nuruodo, Inrokini, and Sabosen – represent bloodlines said to predate modern Chiss civilization, and every Chiss claims affiliation to one of them. In truth, the family names are little more than cultural holdovers since Chiss bloodlines are so mixed that any individual could easily claim affiliation to any family name. Since the families are not in competition, allegiance to a family typically does not affect daily life. Heavy on: R's, K's, N's, T's, & double-consonants

Coynite

Coynite names had an important social and status depending on the way they were written. Names were not just words, but stories. By literally translating the meaning of the phrases, it was often possible to know the history of an item, a person, or a location. The longer the name, the more honored a being was or more noble their family. However, Coynites seldomed use their full names except when first establishing who had higher standing, such as upon first meeting. As a concession to off-world customs, Coynites would allow aliens to use shortened versions of names, but only if the alien conferred the appropriate level of respect upon the Coynite. To deride an object of great importance or be disrespectful was an unforgivable offense.

When syllables of a Coynite name are capitalised, it meant that the object, place or person was worthy of great respect. All things associated with the En'Tra are always capitalised. Likewise, proper names were capitalised. Some phrases or names were never capitalised; this indicated a relationship with af'harl.

Many Coynite warriors of noble birth had very long names, which an example might be translated as "Trel'tak, honorable warrior who defeated a noble of higher standing, of Clan Muls'rak, leaders of the War of Unification".

A Coynite's name is a story in itself, usually composed of many words and phrases, speaking of everything from their given names to their life achievements. In most conversation, however, a shortened form of the name is used, with two given/earned names followed by the name of their clan. Capital letters indicate honor, while lower-case letters denote cowardice. Heavy on: T's, G's, L's, R's & A's

Duros

Traditionally, Duros are given only one name as children. They often choose a surname to be used for official business, such as public service or military. They have also found that other cultures have difficulty with multiple individuals sharing a name, so a surname helps them in inter-species relations. Statistically, approximately 35% of Duros have taken surnames. Often, once they become famous they often drop their original given name. Duro names have meanings that give some insight into their culture, which has changed as their homeworld became overcrowded and polluted. Many names refer to extinct animals or plants. Jenet

When Jenet were introduced to each other, a complete record of their accomplishments was given as part of their name. With this information, Jenet could tell where another Jenet was placed in their complex social hierarchy.

Accomplishments which increased status required two other Jenet as witnesses. To avoid fraud, Jenet were never allowed to introduce themselves. Pairs of Jenet could work together for years without knowing each others name, simply because a third Jenet acquainted with them both was unavailable. Of course, this did not entirely prevent Jenet from dishonesty, as they frequently exaggerated the accomplishments of their friends.

Kel Dors

Kel Dor surnames, like Human surnames, were based on ancient family trades or jobs, or even a description of a particularly famous Kel Dor in the family. The Koon family name, for example meant 'explorer'.

Kel Dor given names were based, loosely, on the sounds generated by Dorin's unique atmospheric phenomena. This tradition was highly popular among the Kel Dors, and the upper classes considered it bad luck to name a child away from Dorin. Kel Dor names tended to be short, usually monosyllabic, due to an ancient superstition about the "wind spirits" of Dorin. Upon hearing the sustained wind-sound of a long name, so the story went, the wind spirits would have mistaken the child for one of their own, and carried him or her off to be raised as a wind-child. No one believed in this myth for thousands of years, but the effect it had on Kel Dor naming conventions remained.

The tradition of using the sounds of atmospheric phenomena meant that Kel Dor given names appeared to have almost no meaning to an outsider, but another Kel Dor who had heard the sound in question and could identify the phenomenon would understand the significance and meaning of the name.

Twilek

Rather than having separate personal and clan Names, a Twilek would have a single name that combined these two elements. The personal portion of the name would be selected with the clan name in mind, often involving an intentional alteration of the words or a shift in the letters to change the meaning of the name as a whole. This change was meant to symbolize a way of unity. A Twi'lek's name would also be split into multiple parts if they were exiled as a criminal, as this was considered very dishonoring.

In some cases Twi'leks would combine the multiple-part name of a non-Twi'lek into a single name, often changing the pronunciation in the same way that they would alter their own given names and clan names.

An example of a true Twi'lek name would be Nawar'aven. This name would be split into two parts when used outside of the local culture, becoming Nawara Ven (the clan name in this case being Ven, but the name Nawara was selected with the intention of moving the last a into the second half of the name, thus changing the meaning).

Another example of this naming system could be the name of the species itself; if separated, Twi'lek could mean: "Twin lekku."

It is worth noting that this naming convention did not appear to be in use during the waning days of the Galactic Republic, when even prominent Twi'lek leaders such as Ro Fenn and Pol Secura preferred using their core names even in private conversation with each other on Ryloth.

All Twi'leks are given a single name that resembles "Name'clan". Due to the dualistic properties [most words have two or more meanings] of Twi'lek grammar, they are often grouped with a syllable carryover effect (as in Billclin'ton, pronounced "bilclin" *pause* "ton"). Also, some Twi'leks who leave the homeworld of Ryloth revert to separate Names: (such as the case of Nawar'aven or Bibfort'una).

Whiphid

Naming practices vary between Whiphid tribes. Most often, both genders have one given name. For males, when the first letter or letters are separated from the given name by an apostrophe, it is usually an identification with their hunting pack (the prefix remains there, regardless of whether they still engage in active hunting or not). Since only males are allowed to pack hunt, females do not receive a prefix. Other Whiphid tribes use short surNames:, which serve the same purpose as the prefixes, Heavy on: W's, P's & rolling syllables (r's and l's),

Wookiee

The Wookiee language (Shyriiwook) is made up of noises that can be categorized into barks, growls, grumbles, grunts, moans, snarls, and trills. It is almost impossible for non-Wookiees to pronounce properly, though supposedly Ewoks and Yuzzem can get close. A standard translation replaces Shyriiwook noises with sounds in Basic. Generally it is only used to transcribe, but can also translate names into sounds that others can pronounce. The basic approximations of Wookiee names are not technically correct, but a Wookiee familiar with Basic can recognize this version of a name and will answer to it.

Sometimes cousins or siblings of famous Wookiees are given similar names in honor of their brethren. Heavy on: Vowels, W's, H's, G's, R's & Y's

Miscellaneous Ways to Generate Names

Think of the different name-styles we have here on earth based on language and culture. The ratio of vowels, the ending and the number of names.

Is the language hard and rough or soft and smooth-sounding?

Do they have a single long name or many short?

Do their names mean anything?

(indian names: Sitting Bull)

Is the names different in different social classes?

(royal names)

Do they use H or ' frequently?

Do they have middle names?

Are there a lot of vowels in a row or the opposite?

(baal, kakkrt)

And in Star Wars, the species is very important.

(Nobody could take a Wookiee named "Luc la Pancynaux" serious)

Think of ex. chinese (shing pling ho), russian (endings like -sky), french (endings like -aux), indian (tatanka) names and mix them all together.

A small collection of names in my SW-games:

"Melas J'kaar" (Human PC)
 "Nema Su Bushivo" (Human NPC)
 "Dab Othaan" (a city on a planet named "Tel Othiin")

( Oth =forest in the local language) "Mr. Doh" (Human Gangster boss)
 "Berulad Termae" (Human PC)
 "Shakknar Do R'Keeloh" (Near Human NPC)
 "Ranor" (Duros PC)
 "Khendarr Yoshodoran"
 "Kond "
 "Aler Lockernic"
 "Carl Lixun"
 "Peshian Erohn"
 "Gualtor"

Use these name if you like.

If All Else Fails.....

1. Try writing names backwards. It's simple but effective. For example, "Harry one" is changed to Enoyrrah (good for a Wookie). Joel changes to Leoj (an excellent Sullustan).

2. If you can't get it straight, make it crooked. You can emblish reversals by taking out letters or adding additional ones (especially the "Heavy on:" letters I noted. I.e. Steven-Nevet (a Rodian? Jawa?); Anne- Elnna (Chadra'Fan? Whiphid?)

3. Use foriegn dialect. For most Earthlings, halfway across the planet is as alien as halfway across the galaxy. Whose to know? You can pickup translation dictionaries for a little digging and a buck or 2. Try avoiding the Romance Languages (Spanish, Italian, French, Portuguese) because most of English is based on them, and they don't seem as faroff. Most German names seem "silly" instead of "exotic" to English speakers. That leaves Oriental, Greek, African, Scandanavian & Native American tongues. For [semi-]instantaneous translations to Finnish, send some words to Zer0.

4. Name Dropping. Name dropping is a time honored event in SW, just ask the pros about all of their name "easter eggs." Just don't make it too obvious, or players get annoyed and your sister finds out you named a Hutt in her likeness. ;o) Also, don't try the "I'll just rearrage the letters in Skywalker" approach. Players seem to pick up on character rip-off's fairly quickly, and rarely see them as cute.

5. Remember, SW Humans are human all the same. What if an Old-Republic scout was totally love sick over a some M or Fem back home and he/she was mapping a region? The result is that frankly every major system in the "Robbins" sector is named—in one variation or another—after "Anne Robbins" or things she does or likes. There would be the Shining Hair Nebula, Ord Robbins, AnneMa, Urbanus, KhanRobbins.... The residents of the sector have the same sense of awe of her that Americans have of George Washington. Outsiders hate it becuae they are constantly getting directions mixed up... and now you've got a cheap plot quirk and a naming solution, as in one!

6. "Be" the name. Languages are going to be effected by environment and physiology. If it's a Mon Cal or Quarren, say some names through a glass of water. If it's a Rodian, pucker your lips up and act like Greedo. (the taunting tone of voice even helps!). If it's a big, hulking character, bellow a few times and then start saying words (Your neighbors love this. Try doing it in crowded elevators and subway stations ;o).

7. Make your names "high scoring". Going on the assumption that other languages are usually drastically different from English names (why not? It's nowhere near any and all Earth languages), rare letters may be common on other worlds. So, you need a conversion scale. Here's what you do. Convert a Scrabble (tm Milton-Bradley) board into an Alien language workshop. This can be achieved by flipping the board over. Try making names that are high scoring yet plausibly pronounceable. If you don't have a scrabble board, here's the scoring system:
 {A, E, I, L, N, O, R, S, T, U}=1 – {D, G}=2 –
 {B, C, M, P}=3 – {F, H, V, W, Y}=4 – {K}=5 –
 {J, X}=8 – {Q, Z}=10
