INTRODUCTION

The items in this list are primarily aimed at a modern setting, but many of them can be adapted for a historical or fantasy setting, by substituting anything electrical or electronic with mechanical or magical, and any unsuitable materials, such as plastic, with more suitable ones, such as wood, bone or stone. For example, an electric light can be replaced with candles or magical light and a plastic skull could be replaced with a wooden one.

Whilst the various items may simply be used for dressing up a location with Halloween-themed clutter, they can be used for other purposes. The items may seem to be ordinary Halloween decorations - but perhaps they are not. The fake eyeballs may be real, and so could the skulls, the bones and the blood - or anything else for that matter. The pumpkins or other decorations could be possessed by evil spirits. Combined, these could turn a normal Halloween location into something a lot more horrific than it originally appeared.
