

REAL SOLSPACE

A guide to our stellar neighborhood

Sol. Mankind's home star system. Whether it's the center of a stellar empire, or whether humans are making their first tremulous steps out into the stars, our home system and its stellar neighborhood features frequently in science fiction game settings.

This article is designed as a worldbuilding tool. It provides a map of our region of space, based on real astronomical data. You can populate the star systems shown in any way you wish; you can even rename them (many of them feature in popular sci-fi TV shows and novels under different names). The map is presented on a hex grid where one hex represents one parsec, making it fully compatible with the WOIN space travel rules (see N.E.W. The Science Fiction Roleplaying Game or WOIN Space).

To populate these systems, you will need the star system and civilization creation tables found in N.E.W. The Science Fiction Roleplaying Game and WOIN Building A Universe. In essence, this document performs steps 1 and 2 for you (Determine System Type and Determine Star Types), leaving you to continue with generating or choosing the associated planets and civilizations.

As of the time of writing, astronomers have discovered close to 3,500 exoplanets. However, there are many more to be found. Indeed, a possible rocky planet orbiting Proxima Centauri, our nearest neighbor, has recently been detected. For this reason, this document does not attempt to include planetary data - it tells you about the nearby stars, but the rest is up to you.

STELLAR CLASSIFICATIONS

N.E.W. The Science Fiction Roleplaying Game and WOIN Space both describe star types in detail. Below is a recap of the pertinent information.

SPECTRAL CLASSIFICATION

Stars are classified based on their temperature. The classification system, originally devised in the 20th Century by Morgan and Keenan, uses a system of letters and numbers. The letters indicate a broad spectral classification in descending order of temperature, with numbers from 0-9 subdividing them further (with 0 being the hottest and 9 being the coolest).

Additionally, a luminosity class is represented by Roman Numerals.

Sol, for example, is a G2V star - a yellow main sequence star with a temperature of about 5,800K.

OTHER NEARBY OBJECTS

Most of the objects in our stellar neighborhood are star systems. N.E.W. and WOIN Space both list many other objects, along with their distances from Sol; these include star clusters, nebulae, pulsars, black holes, and more.

The nearest star cluster is the 3-parsec-wide Hyades Star Cluster, some 46 parsecs coreward from us. The nearest pulsar is the Geminga Pulsar, a neutron star 250 parsecs away, and the nearest known black hole is part of a binary system called Ao about 920 parsecs away. The closest nebula to Sol is the Helix Nebula, some 160 parsecs away. The center of the galaxy is about 8,589 parsecs distant.

The map in this document covers star systems within 10 parsecs (32.6 light years) or so of Sol. It takes roughly a month to travel across the map at FTL-7, about 10 days at FTL-11, and about 10 hours at FTL-30.

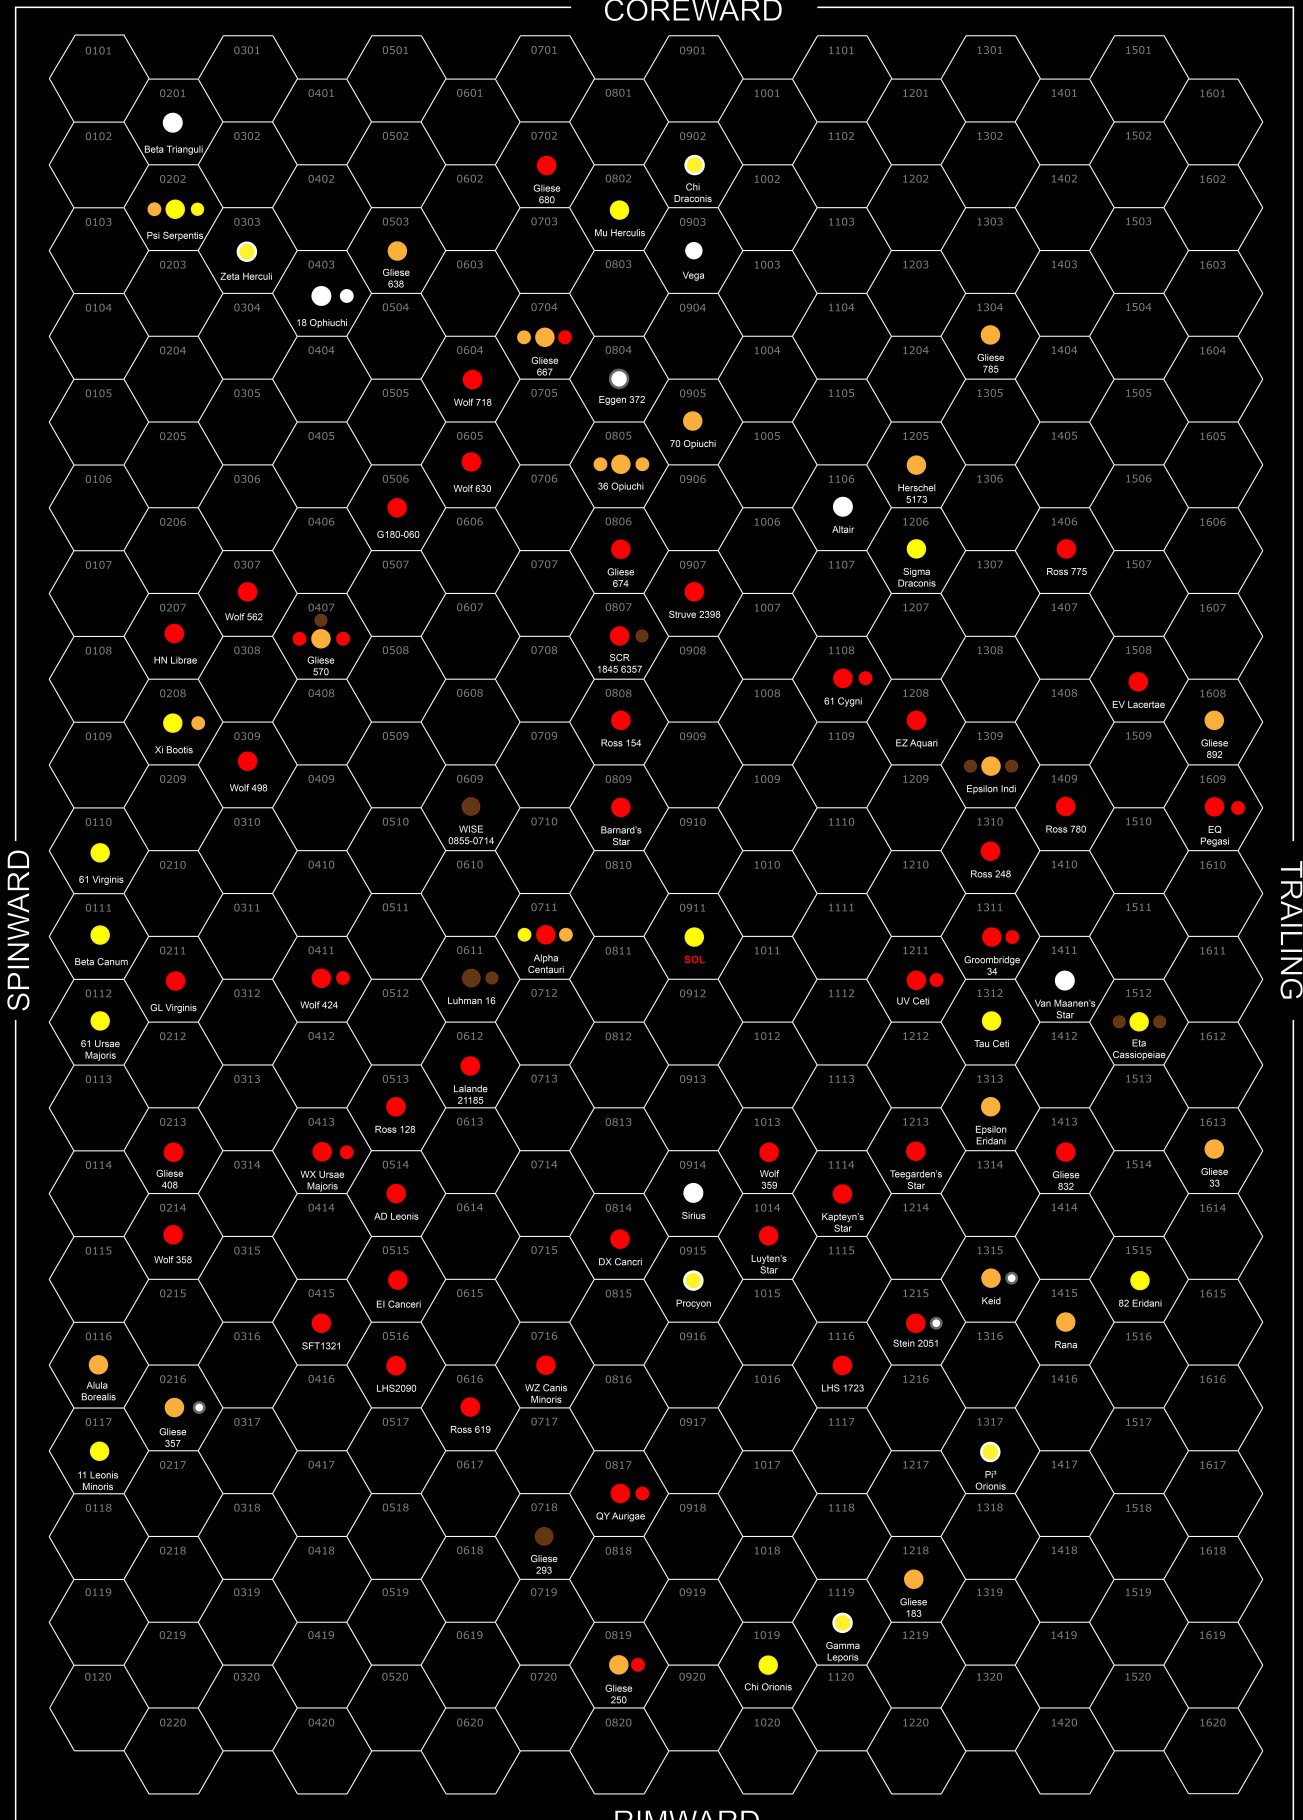

WRITING RUSS MORRISSEY
CARTOGRAPHY IAN STEAD

Spectral	Description
O	Blue; hot, extremely luminous
B	Blue-white; luminous
A	White; common
F	Yellow-white; common
G	Yellow; common
K	Orange; common
M	Red; red dwarfs and red giants

Luminosity	Description
I	Supergiant
II	Bright giant
III	Giant
IV	Sub-giant
V	Main-sequence or dwarf
VI	Sub-dwarf

The star listings table refers to two other star types - WD (white dwarfs, otherwise known as "degenerate" stars, and are spectral classification D), and BD (brown dwarfs and methane dwarfs, which are spectral classifications T and Y).

ALPHA CENTAURI: SOL'S NEIGHBOR

The Alpha Centauri system is the closest star system to our own. Proxima Centauri is the closest of these stars to Sol, and may or may not be gravitationally bound to the other two, Alpha Centauri A (G2V) and Alpha Centauri B (K1V). Proxima Centauri is roughly 0.2 light years (15,000 AU) from the larger pair.

At the time of writing, an earth-sized exoplanet designated Proxima b has been detected in the habitable zone of Proxima Centauri. By the time you read this, more information may well be available!

To the naked eye, the entire Alpha Centauri system appears as a single star, visible only from Earth's southern hemisphere. It is the third brightest star in the night sky (the brightest is Sirius, the Dog Star).

Alpha Centauri sometimes goes by the names Rigel Kent and Toliman. The former is a variation of the Arabic Rigil Kentaurus, or Foot of the Centaur. Other names for the system include Nán Mén (Chinese, Southern Gate), and Bermbermgle (Australian Aboriginal).
