

- GONG FARMER -

DESCRIPTION

Trudging through effluent, gong farmers brave the foetid stench of sewer and cistern alike. Clearing sewage channels and build-ups of compacted faeces, they shovel the human waste into sacks and transport it elsewhere, often to be sold as manure or dried and used as fuel. Gong farmers stumble across all manner of things during their onerous work, from dead bodies to thieves, from the ever-present rats to things far worse. They are not above rummaging through the waste and detritus either, locating whatever odd coins, buttons, or other knick-knacks might have accidentally found their way down below.
