DISTINCTIVE LUXURY, SNOBBISH WAYS....

So the situation is rather a timeless classic... the adventurers have acquired more wealth than the combined riches of fifty kings, they've built their castles high, and now all they have to show for it is rooms full of coins and gems and drab, mundane furniture.

Release your wealthy characters from their simple clothes, boring furnishings, and dull, petty jewelry. Shower them with wonderful, unique items as you quickly drain their coffers dry. After all, once they've spent their last 35,000 gold pieces on a pair of garnet studded, dragon hide boots you'll be having fun watching the characters sweat over the division of treasure again.

THE LAYOUT OF THIS BOOK:

The volumes of Distinctive Items Of Snobbery are presented and laid out in a manner that makes for easy reading and reasonably easy generic conversion. While it may be the choice of most players to purchase the items listed in this volume the various assortments of goods can also be randomly rolled up if you so choose. The different elements concerning each item are described below.

Item: Quite simply, what the item is.

Roll: In case you wish to randomly roll these items up as miscellaneous treasure, use a twenty sided die and consult the roll table for the correct result of the dice rolls.

Weight: This is an estimated weight of the item. Some items are too small to accurately weigh.

Type: There are numerous different types of items. For easy reference an alphabetical code is provided. These codes are described below:

A= An Object Of Art. Art objects are sometimes a bit harder to sell on the open market as the exact value of an item of art often depends on the consumer's tastes.

C= Clothing. The described item functions as an item of clothing or clothing accessories. These items can be easily ruined unless stored properly and taken care of. Clothing items must also be regularly cleaned.

E= Equipment. Such an item makes for good adventuring equipment.

F= Furniture. Furniture items tend to be heavy and bulky but durable.

J= Jewelry. Jewelry items can sometimes be somewhat fragile or scratched up easily unless reasonable care is provided.

M= Miscellaneous. Some items simply lack an appropriate category.

Value: In this guide, a reasonably universal average in gold coinage is provided. While most all items in all volumes of Distinctive Items Of Snobbery shall be in terms of gold, standards for the lesser copper and silver coinages (as well as gold) is provided below to help the reader easily convert the exact worth of these items over to the fantasy role playing game system of their choice.

1copper= a small amount of money, equal in value to the purchase of a simple torch, a very small loaf of bread, or the petty offering to a beggar.

1silver= a staple monetary sum, equal to a poor, unskilled laborer's work for one day or a plain, simple meal at a small inn. One silver coin is worth around ten copper coins.

1gold= a sum of money mostly used by skilled craftsmen, merchants, and aristocrats. One gold coin is worth around ten silver coins.
